JOBLESS 'CRISIS' HIT

Macdonald Must Go: Opposition

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — An angry opposition Tuesday described statistics showing that there are more than 900,000 Canadians unemployed as a "crisis of catastrophic and disastrous proportions" and demanded the resignation of Finance Minister Donald Macdonald.

With Prime Minister Trudeau absent from the tempestuous Commons for the second consecutive day the combined opposition's attack was levelled at Macdonald.

He has said he will bring in his budget March 31.

It is a budget which opposition financial critics now say "must" contain major cuts in personal income taxes to try to stop the jobless level topping the one million mark.

Manpower Minister Bud Cullen, also facing a hostile Opposition in the Comomns, added there is "no reason to react in panic" to high jobless figures.

The government had predicted worsening unemployment last year, he said, and has already announced make-work programs.

Derek Backburn (NDP Brant) said that if Macdonald did not bring in substantial personal income-tax cuts and new make-work measures, the minister should resign.

Macdonald said he would make any new announcements in his budget but added the government would give attention to the work force.

Conservative Leader Joe Clark, who called Macdonald the architect of a policy which had created the worst unemployment in history, said in the Commons a fight against jobless totals should be the prime target of the budget.

Outside the House, Clark said the government should have had a budget earlier because it would take another six months for economic policies to bring results.

Short-term measures would be needed, he added.

David Orlikow (NDP-Winnipeg North) called for an emergency debate in the Commons but his motion was turned down.

Broadbent said if the hidden unemployed — persons not counted in the Statistics Canada survey or who have given up the search for work — were included, there would be 1.5 million unemployed.

Both parties called for personal tax cuts to stimulate the

Beirut Leftist Leader Slain

BEIRUT (AP) — Kamal Jumblatt, leader of the leftist Lebanese Moslem-Palestinian alliance in Lebanon's civil war, was killed in a machine-gun ambush today, police reported.

Jumblatt was a millionaire landlord espousing a leftist reform program, a poet and a mystic with a masterly command of power politics. He won the 1972 Lenin Peace Prize.

MEXICAN CAR TRAVEL UNSAFE, BCAA WARNS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Automobile Association has warned its 254,000 members that travelling by vehicle in Mexico is extremely dangerous and reports of violence there are increasing steadily.

"It's a bad situation," Bill McKinley, BCAA president, said Tuesday. "Tourists are beginning to stay away in droves because of the unfair treatment they are receiving.

"If you have an accident they throw you in jail whether it's your fault or not," he said. "It all depends on the local police. Unless you come up with $2,000 or $3,000 you'll likely spend a fair amount of time in jail."

McKinley said there is little the BCAA, the American Automobile Association or any Canadian agency can do to assist motorists when trouble occurs.

"The association has been growing increasingly concerned not only at the attacks on tourists on some lonely stretches of Mexican highway but the increasing number of complaints from members of harassment by police, vehicle confiscation and the corruption of some officials," McKinley said.

While several stories cannot be fully substantiated, the few members that have been able to detail their experiences have caused the BCAA to seek assistance from the Canadian Automobile Association and the AAA, he said.

Mexican authorities have agreed to set up programs suggested by the AAA to improve travelers' safety and comfort, he said.

"Like BCAA, the AAA has been receiving intensified reports of hostile treatment of some motorists, while travel in the Mexican state of Sinaloa now involves substantial risk," McKinley said.

He said that although representation made to the president of Mexico by the AAA had resulted in a large number of Mexican troops being brought into the state to control bandits, motorists were still urged to avoid the west coast Highway 15 south of Mazatlan. Several murders and robberies have occurred in the area.

McKinley said one BCAA member involved in a vehicle accident in Mexico, who was completely blameless, found herself charged with a serious driving offence because she had not had the foresight to bribe the local official as the other driver had done.

Police Shoot-Out Ends 2-Day Hijack

Times News Services

ZURICH — An Italian hijacker who took a Spanish airliner on a 7,500 mile journey across two continents in search of his young daughters was captured today in a shoot-out with Swiss police. All 22 hostages scrambled off the plane to safety.

The police, wearing bullet-proof vests under pilots' uniforms, boarded the Iberian Airlines Boeing 727 during an exchange of crews and — with guns firing — rushed Luciano Porcari after he began shooting.

One policeman was wounded in the leg.

The 14 remaining passengers, who accompanied the gunman on stopovers in seven cities in Europe and Africa in his bizarre 43-hour journey, rushed off the plane during the shootout.

Police said Porcari managed to grab his Winchester rifle and fire one shot, slightly wounding the one policeman. No one else was hurt, the police said.

"Holy Mother of God, it's finished," said Porcari's estranged wife in Turin, Italy, when she heard it was over. The wife, Isabella Zavoli, had refused to surrender the couple's five-year-old daughter to Porcari, one of his demands during the hijacking.

Police said Porcari, a 36-year-old auto mechanic, was being held in investigative custody pending a decision whether he should be tried in Switzerland. Spain is expected to seek his extradition.

The police said one passenger, obviously watched by the hijacker, searched the boarding agents but let the first one pass. The second policeman was entering when gunfire broke out.

"Suddenly, passengers began rushing down the stairs as shooting began between Porcari and the two agents, whose bullet-proof vests had apparently been detected."

An armored truck sped to the aircraft and uniformed police rushed aboard and overpowered the hijacker.

"All the passengers and crew managed to leave the aircraft and get to a safe distance without any of them being hurt," a police spokesman said.

He said Porcari, 37, armed with a rifle and pistol, had ordered the crew exchange after the jetliner made an emergency landing at Zurich on a flight from Poland to Italy because a passenger reportedly had suffered a heart attack.

Farm Reserve Now Car Lot

An eight-acre pareel of land near Chilliwack recently excluded from the agricultural land reserve is owned by the same man who provided Chilliwack Socred MLA Harvey Schroeder with a free constituency office.

The B.C. Land Commission and the regional district had recommended earlier the land remain in the reserve, but a cabinet committee ruled last week it could be removed for use as a car dealership lot.

Schroeder himself made representation to the committe, supporting the application by, Douglas Brett to have the land removed.

The question of Schroeder's office, and a meeting held there between Environment Minister Jim Nielsen and a Save the Farmland group from Chilliwack, was brought up Tuesday during question period in the legislature by NDP MLA Bob Skelly (Alberni).

Schroeder said there was no connection between Brett's application to the cabinet committee and his constituency office.

Neilsen said the issue was "much ado about nothing."

Schroeder said that although he paid no rent for the office used by his constituency and owned by Brett, he did have to provide about $1,800 or $2,000 worth of renovations before it was usable.

It was given to the constituency association by Brett on the understanding those renovations would be made, he said.

His association used the office for a year, but vacated it last fall, before Brett's application was made for removal from the land reserve.

Schroeder said he sup-

Young Man Killed On Malahat

A single car accident on the Malahat early today claimed the life of an 18-year-old youth, the tenth person to die in traffic mishaps in Greater Victoria this year.

Peter John DeHaan, of 240 Simcoe, was pronounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital at 2:45 a.m., about 75 minutes after the accident.

Colwood RCMP said DeHaan was in a northbound car that went out of control near the Malahat Chalet, smashed into a telephone booth, hit a power pole and came to rest against a tree.

Both DeHaan and a 29-year-old woman riding in the car were thrown from the vehicle.

The woman, whose name has not been released pending notification of next of kin, is in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with head and internal injuries.

Police are unable to say which of the two was the driver of the car.

Bigger Firms Backed

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation that makes efficiency the key test of whether companies may merge or form monopolies, even if competition suffers because of it, was introduced in the Commons today by Tony Abbott, consumer and corporate affairs minister.

Abbott said at a news conference the proposed legislative approach is justified because "companies have to operate in an increasingly hostile international environment."

This means they may have to band together into larger units to increase production at lower cost.

The proposed legislation, the second and final stage of the federal overhaul of combines laws started more than 10 years aog, also establishes consumers' rights to start class actions against companies that violate the combines law.

Under prescribed conditions, an individual could begin a suit for recovery of damages against a company that has allegedly committed an offence.

Every other person seeking comparable damages would not be required to file suits but would be awarded damages if the individual won his case.

This provision would be included in a new Competition Act, which Abbott proposes to replace the existing Combines Investigation Act.

A new competition board, with wide descretionary powers to conduct civil reviews of proposed mergers, monopolies and agreements between companies on specialized production, would replace the existing restrictive trade practices commission.

THE NOMINEES

Best Actor nominee Sylvester Stallone (Rocky) is a man of many talents and great perserverance. Stallone is not only the star of Rocky, which is itself nominated for Best Picture, but he also wrote the script which is nominated for Best Screenplay.

Finding himself at loose ends after graduating from the University of Miami in 1969 Stallone recalled that he had enjoyed acting in a school production of Death Of A Salesman and consequently decided to try an acting career in New York. Unable to land a job as an actor Stallone turned to writing while working part time as an usher at the Walter Reade Theatre. He was reasonably successful and sold several television scripts. He also wrote most of the script for a film entitled Lords Of Flatbush in which he also had a leading role. At this time Sylvester decided to go to Hollywood. Prior to his starring role in Rocky he appeared in Capone and Death Race 2000.

His insistance that he star in the film rather than bring in an established star who would guarantee the producers a hit at the box office has paid off for Stallone both as a writer and as an actor. Whether it will pay off with an Academy Award remains to be seen.

DON'T THEY DESERVE OCCASIONAL FUN?

Do healthy, able-bodied Victorians really believe that the handicapped don't deserve to have any fun, any pleasure, any enjoyment in their lives?

Do they believe that a modicum of food, shelter and perhaps some rehabilitative or other treatment is plenty good enough for those who have mental or physical handicaps which make it difficult for them to live "out in the world" lives?

The Victoria Times and CJVI-900 hope that there are many Victoria readers and listeners out there who don't think this way. That's why they have joined to support a small, struggling local group which certainly does believe strongly that the handicapped deserve a happy life, as near to what most people consider a normal life as can be attained.

Don't turn away from this appeal. It is important to human dignity — your human dignity, as well as that of the handicapped. Please turn to page 17 and learn more about this remarkable project.

Priority Promised for Seat Belt Law

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Mandatory seatbelt legislation was reintroduced in the B.C. legislature Tuesday with a promise that it has priority this session.

Transport and Communications Minister Jack Davis said he hoped that by mid or late summer B.C. drivers and passengers will have to buckle up or face fines up to $500.

The legislation was first introduced at last spring's session, but was never debated.

The legislation, the Motor Vehicle Amendment Act, requires drivers and passengers, including all children exeept those under the age of six, to wear seat belts when the car is in motion.

There are several exceptions:

—A doctor can sign a form saying a person cannot wear a seatbelt for either medical reasons or because the person is too large or has some other physical handicap.

—When the car is in reverse, seatbelts are unnecessary.

—Anyone who has to get in or out of a vehicle frequently, such as a bread or milk delivery person, and whose vehicle does not go faster than 25 miles per hour when in operation, need not wear seatbelts.

The legislation is similar to that introduced in Ontario in January, 1976, where there has been a 16 per cent reduction in accident injuries over the year.

Davis said if B.C. shows a comparable reduction, as a result of the mandatory seatbelt legislation, last year the province would have had 3,800 fewer injured people.

"It is estimated that the prevention of death and injuries together would also have eliminted a demand in the order of 43,608 bed days in our hospitals," Davis said.

A report from the B.C. Road Safety Co-ordinating Council has shown that the dollar savings this year resulting from an increase in seatbelt usage from 20 per cent to 50 per cent could save the province $12.3 million in direct medical and hospital costs alone.

"Nor does that take into account the loss of productive talent, especially that of our young people to society ... pain, suffering, bereavement," Davis said.

The government does not intend that the law be "policed rigorously," Davis said, but motorists picked up for other driving offences like speeding would be checked.

Signs will be put up at B.C. borders, Davies said, telling tourists that seatbelts are mandatory.

Although the legislation provides for a $500 fine, or a suspended entence or a three-month jail terms, the average will be much lower, the minister said.

CP Air Slashes 200 Jobs in Wake of $9.8M Loss

VANCOUVER (CP) — CP Air is cutting 200 jobs off the payroll and disposing of four medium-range jet aircraft in an effort to trim operating losses.

Ron Keith, director of public relations for CP Air, said layoff notices have been sent to 30 pilots, and about 60 pilots ultimately will be laid off in the airline's economy drive.

He said the airline, Canada's second largest, also will dispose of four Boeing 727-100s, with an actual book value of about $12 million.

The cuts also will affect 80 flight attendants and 60 baggage handlers, mechanics and clerks. The largest number of layoffs will occur in Vancouver, with some layoffs in Toronto and Montreal.

The airline employs about 7,000 persons, 4,000 of them based in Vancouver.

Keith said the Vancouver-based airline lost $9.8 million in 1976, despite economy measures that included more than 300 layoffs.

He said the latest cuts follow a survey that was begun in early January.

"We've been working since the beginning of the year to adjust capacity to the market," he said.

Keith said the airline is working to improve its mainline domestic routes, which are suffering what he termed "a no-growth situation" after years of traffic increases.

Despite over all losses in 1975 of almost $6.4 million, the airline covered direct operating costs of $329 million.

Last year, gross revenues increased to $350 million, but failed to meet immediate operating expenses, such as wages and fuel bills, of $353.4 million.

CP Air management still is talking with the affected unions about ways to eliminate the 200 jobs. Also under discussion is work-sharing to avoid outright dismissals.

Keith said the company has no estimate of when all 200 jobs will be cut.

Of the four aircraft to be sold, one is to be returned to Boeing on Thursday. An offshore customer has acquired an option to buy the remaining three. The aircraft have been made redundant by schedule changes which will take full effect May 1.

The airline is attempting to increase its load factor to 65 per cent from the 60.8 per cent in 1976 by flying fewer aircraft.

On its trans-continental service, the airline will operate eight flights in each direction during the summer instead of the current nine flights.

Flights between Vancouver and California already have been cut to four a day from five. Flights out of Vancouver to northern British Columbia points and the Yukon and to Japan will remain unchanged.

Ian Gray, CP Air president, said Tuesday that he hopes that the latest planned cuts will result in a profit in 1977, provided the national economy holds up.

CAR LOT

ported the application for use of the agriculturally-designated land as a car lot because the eight acres was the original site of old farm buildings and the site was covered with gravel.

Brett has atempted to have another 20 acres removed from the reserve, but Scroroeder said he opposed that as the land could be used for farming purposes.

Nielsen said Schroeder appeared before the cabinet committee which rules on the application to provide "local knowledge."

Nielsen said the question of Schroeder's constituency office has "no relevancy."

"This has nothing whatsoever to do with any of it. It's totally irrelevant," he said.

Nielsen said the land was removed from the reserve because it was already "alienated" from other agricultural land in the area.

He said there is a motel down the road from the parcel of land and that the removal of the eight acres would not be detrimental to agriculture.

Brett was not available for comment.

Injury Won't Stymie Protest: Greenpeace

ST. ANTHONY, Nfld. (CP) — The Vancouver-based Greenpeace Foundation says it is considering laying a charge of criminal negligence against sealing ship owner Karl Karlsen after a Greenpeace member was injured Tuesday while protesting the hunt.

The foundation also says the incident will not stop Greenpeace members from going back on the ice floes.

Paul Watson, leader of the Greenpeace protest group here, apparently suffered a dislocated shoulder when he was winched up to the Canadian sealing ship Martin Karlsen, dangling from a pile of sealskins to which he had handcuffed himself.

Karl Karlsen, Norwegian-born owner of the ship, said Watson was not injured deliberately.

The incident occurred as the annual seal hunt began on the Front, a field of drifting ice off Newfoundland's northeastern tip.

Opening day yielded 11,930 of a total quota of 85,000 seals. The federal fisheries service reported the first day's kill at 6,030 for Canadian vessels and 5,900 for Norway, the only other country participating in the hunt. The Canadian quota on the Front is 62,000 and the Norwegian share is 35,000.

Watson handcuffed himself to the seal pelts, "the idea being that they would not be able to load the seal pelts on the boat."

Patrick Moore, one of about 30 Greenpeace members protesting the seal hunt, said Watson had been throwing sealers' clubs into the water and also was dumping sealskins through openings in the ice.

Watson then handcuffed himself by his left wrist to a long wire rope used to hoist the pelts aboard the ship. When the winch began taking up the wire, Watson also held on with his right hand as he was dragged over the ice pans, which are separated in places by slush and open water.

Moore said the ship's crew hoisted Watson up and let him hang from the wire while they unhooked the load of pelts.

He said the crew then dumped Watson in the water four times to his neck. On the fourth dip, the handcuffs broke and Watson plunged into the water, from where he was retrieved by Peter Ballem, a Greenpeace lawyer.

Meanwhile, Brigitte Bardot said she wants to meet Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau today to convince him to try and stop the annual seal hunt.

Macdonald Resignation Demanded by Opposition

economy and alleviate unemployment. They also asked for new job programs.

Macdonald, however, admitted that federal economic policies may have contributed to high inflation rates during the six years to last October.

We agreed with Sinclair Stevens (PC—York-Simcoe) at a Commons finance committee meeting that federal policies during that six-year period may have been partly responsible for some economic difficultites.

Stevens calimed that in the six years, inflation had accelerated by 55 per cent and federal spending increased by 127 per cent, while the economy grew by only 31.7 per cent.

The amount of money in circulation doubled and the result was an inflationary spiral that eventually resulted in the imposition of selective wage and price controls.

Canadian business leaders said, meanwhile, that no immediate reduction in present high unemployment rates can be expected.

"The fact that unemployment has risen about .4 per cent in February and has now topped 900,000 is not in itself a critical factor," J. H. Stevens, vice-president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said.

A. R. McMurrich, president of the Metropolitan Toronto Board of Trade, said increased heavy construction, especially on government projects, housing and transportation, might help solve economic problems.

"The latest increase in unemployment has no special implications," he said.

Saccharin 'Hysteria' Hits Canada, U.S.

BITTER WARNING

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Andy Jacobs thinks people have nothing to fear from saccharin — but rats might.

He has proposed a bill to allow the sale of saccharin in the United States with this wording on the label:

"Warning: The Canadians have discovered saccharin is dangerous to your rat's health."

Times News Services

Sales of saccharin are booming in both Canada and the U.S., leading many manufacturers and retailers to believe consumers are stocking up on the soon-to-be-banned sweetener.

The Canadian government has banned saccharin in diet pop effective July 1 and other food products containing the additive must be removed from store shelves by Nov. 1.

John Dunne, spokesman for Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. Ltd. of Toronto, said that "in a lot of cases, we're cleaned out (of stock) at store level."

Warren Hanna, vice-president and general manager of Alberto-Culver of Canada Ltd., Toronto, said there has ben "a real pickup in retail sales."

In New York, flooded with orders from "hysterical" dieters, the sole maker of saccharin in the U.S. and the industries that sell it have scrapped plans to half production of the artificial sweetener.

The rush on saccharin products brings to mind a similar hoarding of sugar during the Second World War.

The only saccharin manufacturer in the U.S., Sherwin-Williams Co. of Cincinnati, last week announced plans to stop production.

The firm abruptly changed its plans Tuesday and announced that instead of closing down production, it was resuming operations.

"Orders on hand represent more than a full month of production," said W. P. Inman, Sherwin - Williams vice-president. The firm has been flooded with orders from "industrial and beverage processors," he added.

A major U.S. marketer of saccharin, the Cumberland Packing Corp. which puts out Sweet n' Low, had stopped production last Thursday with a normal three-month supply in its warehouses.

"We have had telephone calls from hysterical people asking what they should do to get hold of supplies," Eisenstadt said.

"People who needed a sugar substitute had been coming by with trucks to pick up a load."

Eisenstadt said Cumberland has dropped plans to lay off its 500 employees and was producing more Sweet n' Low than ever.

"We've been inundated with orders," he said. "We're working 15-16 hours a day to try to keep up. I'm sorry we closed down for one day last week."

Belgians, U.S. Rushing Aid To Zaire War

KINSHASA (AP) — Belgian weapons and U.S. medical and military equipment have been speeded to Zaire as it tries to repel what it calls an invasion of foreign mercenaries from Angola.

Officials of the central African country said today that 5,000 invaders who crossed into copper-rich Shaba province last week are mercenary troops led by "guerrilla and subversive war specialists from across the Atlantic."

The comment is considered a reference to Cuban forces, which were instrumental in establishing a Marxist regime in Angola.

However, the bulk of the forces are believed to be exiled guerrillas from Zaire itself.

Belgium's weapons shipments are the first reported by any country since Zaire announced the invasion last week. The Belgian foreign ministry said two planeloads of light weapons had been ordered earlier and were only being speeded up. Some sources said 5,000 to 7,000 Belgians are still living in the invaded province, known as Katanga when Zaire was the Belgian Congo.

The Carter administration was hurrying $1 million worth of medical and military equipment to Zaire, including communications equipment, parachutes, packs, rations and fuel tanks.

It is the Carter administration's first involvement in foreign warfare and a spokesman said Carter himself had made the decision.

U.S. officials said they have no confirmation that Cubans are involved in the fighting.

Cuban leader Fidel Castro is visiting Africa this week. He was scheduled to arrive in Tanzania today from Ethiopia.

The Carter administration has been making overtures to Castro in hopes of improving relations with Cuba. Cuban intervention in Zaire might disrupt that effort.

In Paris, however, a group calling itself the Congolese National Liberation Front, described the attacks as a nationalist uprising by the Katangese separatist movement.

Since the central government in Kinshasa quashed a secessionist movement in 1963, the U.S. has supported the unity of Zaire, which was the Belgian Congo.

The Carter administration has budgeted $32.5 million in military aid for Zaire, more than for any other African country.

Carter Invites PLO to Speech

UNITED NATIONS (WP) — The United States, in a break with its past practice, has cleared the way for an invitation to the Palestine Liberation Organization to attend President Carter's speech here Tuesday night and a reception for the president afterward.

Although the PLO has observer status at the United Nations, the United States has refused to grant it official recognition.

In the past, the United States has systematically excluded the PLO from invitation lists to U.S. diplomatic functions here and elsewhere.

Arab diplomats immediately interpreted the move as a gesture to the PLO.

Israeli officials have issued a statement voicing unhappiness.

Spokesmen at the White House, state department and the U.S. mission here would not comment on whether the move was intended as a gesture to the PLO, but U.S. officials said privately the decision was made at "the highest levels" in Washington.

The invitation was officially extended to the PLO and 10 other permanent observer delegations at UN headquarters by Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

The White House, presumably to minimize the publicity impact of Carter shaking hands with the PLO representative, asked the United Nations to cancel planned coverage of the reception by television and photographers, according to UN officials.

The acting chief of the PLO observer mission, Hassan Abdel Rahmen, told by reporters of the invitation said he would have to consult with his superiors before deciding whether to attend.

The survey was recommended by council's committee on equal employment opportunities to determine if minority groups are properly represented in the civic work force.

Man Blamed for Droughts in U.S.

Times News Services

MAR DEL PLATA—Man, not nature, may be responsible for the droughts affecting the U.S., a United Nations conference on water was told Tuesday.

"Man's activities may be affecting the bizarre weather patterns we are experiencing," Charles Warren, chief U.S. delegate to the meeting, said.

"Part of the problem is that we are encouraging population growth in areas that don't have enough water to support it. In California, to do that, we diverted enormous amounts of water from the north to the south of the state."

The U.S. Geological Survey reported this week that a light winter snowfall in parts of the United States "almost assures the lowest water supplied in recorded history this summer for parts of the West Coast."

Marcel Leger, Quebec environment minister attending the conference has complained, meanwhile, that the rest of the Canadian delegation is virtually ignoring the country's French character.

A statement issued from Leger's office in Quebec Tuesday said he was able to make the Canadian delegation grant some small measure of recognition to Quebec's jurisdiction and powers but "only by dint of several pitched battles."

Levesque's Twitch Sideways

Something seems to get lost in the translation of Premier Rene Levesque's remarks on Confederation and Quebec separatism these days. In his latest interview on Quebec television Levesque says his province's independence need not bring about the breakup of Canada and could lead to a renewal of the ties binding the country together. The Parti Quebecois premier seems to be reflecting the views of other party members who claim separation is not a goal in itself, but an instrument to achieve social and economic goals.

Neither of these convoluted explanations will mollify English Canada's real fears after the Parti Quebecois election. Nor should Levesque's comments be interpreted as a new mood of accommodation with the rest of the country. Perhaps Levesque is temporarily softening his stand on independence because of the severe budget he must bring down within weeks and the concomitant economic uncertainty that Quebecers are experiencing along with the rest of their countrymen. There is also the ancillary reason of keeping that double "A" rating on the New York bond market at a time when Quebec needs investment. But a careful reading of Levesque's interpretation of Quebec's future shows a slight change of emphasis. "We never said that by political sovereignty — that is the right of Quebec to govern itself freely, like any normal people — we never said that meant the breakup of Canada."

Well, what does it mean then? In the English sense the words "political sovereignty" mean independence. And it is difficult to imagine an independent Quebec, even one in economic association with Canada, that would not be tantamount to the breakup of Confederation. Delving too deeply into the premier's remarks will automatically lose a person in English and French semantical traps, not to say wishful thinking.

Undoubtedly there will be new accommodations and constitutional changes, as the prime minister remarked in his Washington address. English-Canadians are beginning to understand that the Parti Quebecois' election was only a segment of an ongoing process in Quebec beginning with the Lesage government in the early 1960s. A province that didn't have a department of education for the first 93 years of its existence has a painful time in freeing itself from an embarrassing past. Just how far the process must continue before Quebecers feel at home in the Canadian Confederation remains to be seen.

Revelling in the euphoria of a Quebec government finally responsible to them, Quebecers have taken scant notice of the election's curious effect on other Canadians. Lacking a unique North American language and culture, the rest of the country has difficulty articulating its culture. Perhaps we don't have a culture, per se, but there is a nascent emotional attachment to our place, which we call Canada. It is expressed in a new and vocal support for a united country. Historic voices of dissension and smallmindedness have not been entirely lost, but there is a will throughout the country to keep it together at all costs. This is manifested in the prime minister's spectacular rise in the polls, and in the statements of many individual Canadians through letters to newspapers and to their elected representatives. In one sense, the election of the Parti Quebecois was a good thing for the rest of Canada. It disturbed the consciousness of a complacent nation and drew forth our reluctant emotions about this land. If Levesque holds out an olive branch, or even a nettle, the vast majority of non French-speaking Canadians will grasp it and hold on for dear life. Rene Levesque has been called "a Canadian in search of a country." All he has to do is raise his eyes. It's all around him.

No Suds

No beer in the Memorial Arena nor a beer garden in Centennial Square for Victoria's ethnic groups in June, Victoria city council has ruled.

Last month, it decided against allowing the sale of beer at the city-owned arena. Those who might like to sip a cup of ale during a hockey game or lacrosse contest were pictured as moral degenerates in need of a crutch.

Last week, council turned down an application for a beer garden in the square beside city hall as part of the Victoria Intercultural Association's annual ethnic festival.

According to Ald. Ron McKenzie and Frank Carson, the vote went against the novel proposal because it was thought the beer garden might steal customers from privately-operated pubs in the neighborhood of city hall.

Should council support a group with grants of taxpayers' money and help it to compete against some of those same taxpayers? asked Carson. The answer to that rhetorical question was a ringing negative.

So in the interests of consistency, we expect very soon a council motion banning the sale of liquor by the drink at the publicly-owned and funded McPherson playhouse. Mind you, beer is already unavailable there, but the clientele rarely requests a brew. The theatre-going class seems to prefer something stronger.

The free enterprise lobby on council should be indignant about the practice. Why, right across the street from the McPherson is a hotel which was forced into receivership recently, probably because of the competition from the tax-supported lounge bar operating in the theatre's balcony foyer almost every night of the week.

Come to think of it, should city council staff be allowed to have their own lunchroom? It's heated and lit with public dollars. We understand some employees even make their own coffee. And who pays for the water and electricity? Long-suffering local taxpayers, that's who! A dozen nearby coffeeshops could use the business.

No more subsidies at city hall, whether your drink is brewed from hops, barley or coffee beans.

HAROLD GREER

Computerized Tax Reform

TORONTO — Probably the dirtiest word in Ontario politics is "reassessment" and somewhere in a computer at Queen's Park are reels of tape containing the reassessment of all 3,500,000 properties in the province according to 1975 market values, just waiting for someone to push the doomsday button.

Eventually, the button will have to be pushed. Municipal property taxes are currently based on assessment values which go back, in some cases, to 1949 and there is no rhyme or reason to them.

Because the province subsidizes the municipalities in so many ways according to formulas based on property assessment, it is essential to have a uniform, equitable base to assure equal treatment. That is why the Ontario government took over the assessment function from the municipalities some years ago and proceeded to reassess everything according to 1975 market values.

But the government has been in no hurry to push the button. Reassessment is only the first, basic step to property tax reform. It cannot be introduced equitably without adjusting other elements, such as differential mill rates, exempted properties, business assessment rates and so on.

Rubber Stamp

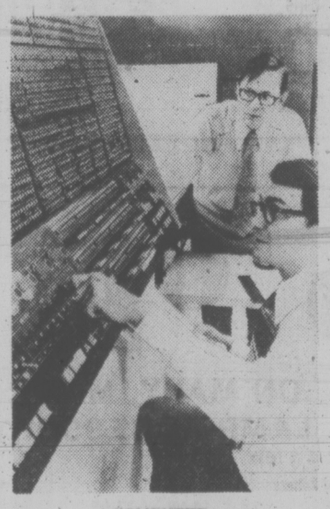
There is, of course, a second reason for going slowly and it is entirely political. Market value assessment was introduced in Peel and York counties for trial run purposes and it was a political disaster. The Davis government, now in a minority position, cannot push the button for the province generally until municipal ratepayers have a better idea of what is involved.

It was in anticipation of this that Treasurer Darcy McKeough, in last year's budget, set out 15 proposals for property tax reform and announced a commission headed by Willis Blair, former reeve of East York, had been appointed to get public reaction to them.

The government's timetable then was that the commission would report by last fall, legislation would be introduced this spring, the button would be pushed and assessment notices would go out this summer for the 1978 municipal tax year.

The Blair commission has now returned with a report which rubber-stamps the government's proposals with certain relatively minor qualifications. There is still time to introduce the necessary legislation this spring, and it may well be. But pushing the button and implementing property tax reform is no closer than it was a year ago and indeed, not much closer than it was 10 years ago, when the government first set out on the road to reform.

The reason is that the Blair commission has done its job too well. It was patently established as a "quickie" commission so the government could say it had consulted the public on its proposals and the public, by and large, had approved. But the rubber stamp is so visible on every page of its report that the document lacks credibility.



COMPUTER
. . . tax answers locked inside

It marvels throughout its report at how ignorant people are about the property tax system. It treats opposing arguments with disdain and rebuts them — or tries to — with dissertations that if only people thought through what they were suggesting, they would never suggest it. As a public relations operation, it's a flop.

Thus the widely-held view (particularly by older ratepayers who have long ago educated their children) that school costs should not be borne by property taxes gets dismissed as a "facile summation" which is "particularly persuasive to many, probably because of the superficial logic it appears to convey at first glance." Summer cottage owners who don't like being soaked by rural municipalities for school costs are told it is "tenuous to argue that a permanent fulltime investment should carry with it but a part-time cost."

More seriously, perhaps, the commission's desire to uphold the government's proposals sometimes results in a fudging of what they can mean in many sectors in terms of tax dollars.

One of the central proposals, for example, is that differential mill rates for residential and commercial properties be abolished and replaced by differential assessment rates. Residential property would be assessed at 50 per cent of market value while non-residential would be assessed at 100 per cent. Commercial and industry property would then bear a flat, additional assessment of 50 per cent of market value instead of the varying rates which now apply depending on the nature of the commercial activity.

Lots of Time

This would mean significantly lower taxes for distilleries, wholesalers, financial institutions and most industrial operations but over 20 per cent higher taxes for small retailers, who find municipal taxes onerous enough already. But the Blair report tries to bury this in verbiage that over-all and in the main the tax impact of the government's proposals will be slight.

Small wonder then that McKeough, after studying the report a week, published it with the comment that the government "has not accepted, rejected or modified" any part of its recommendations.

Now McKeough has a new approach. What most people want to know about tax reform is how much it is going to cost them, relative to what they pay now. It is impossible for them to figure this out on their own because of the interacting effect of the various reform proposals. But McKeough's computer can tell them.

The computer is now being fed all the variables involved and will eventually be able to spell out what the mkll rate would be for every property owner and tenant in the province if the reform proposals are implemented, assuming current municipal levels of expenditures. McKeough hopes to be able to mail these out when the assessment notices based on market value go out.

It will, of course, take time — lots and lots of time.

Architectural Critic

Mayor Mike Young of Victoria continues his avocation as a budding architectural critic with his description of the proposed Royal Bank building at Douglas and Fort as 20th century Babylon, by which I suppose he means a hanging gardens type of structure. This from the man who characterized the Alcazar as ugly.

The mutually exclusive words he uses to describe the new bank should be the kindest comment the building and its sponsors receives.

The artists' rendering that recently appeared in the pages of the Times puts the lie to the mayors words, as the neat little uninspired drawing is anything but futuristic or Babylonian. It is, simply another rehash of vertical and horizontal lines and masses that still passes for modern architecture, with a few plants thrown in for good measure of course. This minor concession to greenery is supposed to show that the architect is with it.

The purpose of renderings and models is strictly to sell the structure to the politician and the public. Therefore if must be a "pretty" picture that is presented. The Times illustration is a good example. First the structure is isolated from its surroundings, thus it appears more important. When it finally appears on Fort St. as it undoubtedly will, its true relationship to surrounding cityscape will be known for the first time. Secondly, the perspective shows the most impressive view of the structure. Thirdly, it is drawn as simply as possible, as though the mechanical arm of the drawing board provided more inspiration than the genius of the architect.

The accompanying copy follows suit. We are told, or it is implied that the building is modern. This means it is naturally better than any previous building that may have stood on the site, it also means that the windows won't open. There are flowers, bushes and trees, and to be against nature is to be against something as sacred as motherhood itself, never mind the damage sustained by cramping plants in containers and putting them in alien settings and subjecting them to the whims of indifferent gardeners and the dirt and the wind of the city. There is a parking garage. The city is satisfied because it really believes by putting cars underground that street congestion is eased and more people will come downtown.

Copy and rendering aside, what does the Royal Bank offer us? Does it offer an exceptional piece of architecture, a design unique to Victoria or the west coast? Is it rich in design or ornamentation? Does it please the eye as well as the soul? When it is in turn demolished by some other soulless corporation of the future, will it be remembered by the name of its architect or its builder like Maclure and Campbell are? Will it be fought for by future preservationists, and when finally demolished will it be remembered with fondness? How will the citizens of the future Victoria feel about our guardianship of their past? — Thos. R. Palfrey, 941 Meares Street.

Business Costs

Recently, a letter from Mrs. T. L. Wilson appeared in the letters columns. The gist of it is that the reason tourists are not coming to Victoria is that the business community is guilty of gouging practices and all we offer tourists is rip-offs in order to fill out own coffers.

There has been considerable comment for the past year or so about costs to the tourist in Victoria vis-a-vis the U.S. and as a result many myths have been created. I would like to attempt laying a few of these to rest. I cannot, of course, speak for the whole business community, but as I am involved in the motel industry along with food beverage, I can speak with some authority on that segment.

I belong to an international group of independent hotel and motel operators (Flag Inns), which produces a travel directory listing rates, etc. for properties located in western Canada and the northwestern United States. I find that the room rates are comparable if you consider location, facilities, type of accommodation, and so on. The most important factor seems to be location; i.e. you will find it much less costly to rent a room in Cache Creek than downtown Vancouver or Victoria. Costs of meals, also, vary greatly depending on location and type of establishment. I returned, recently, from a trip in the United States where I was able to compare prices with those charged here and I found to my surprise that on the whole they were about the same.

There is considerable justification to indicate that prices in the U.S. should be lower than ours. As an example, property taxes in the U.S. on a national average for the hotel-motel industry are less than two per cent of gross sales, while here they are more in the order of 10 to 11 per cent.

I looked at the figures of a hotel in Hawaii with a market value 2½ times greater than a motel I am involved in, yet the property taxes paid by them last year were less than 20 per cent of what I had to pay.

Wages in the U.S. are about 30 to 35 per cent lower than here. In fact, the cost of every single item they require to operate is considerably less than I am faced with. I am sure most everyone recalls that not long ago one could purchase B.C. eggs in the state of Washington for about half of what they cost here. Now, would you blame that on rip-off business people or rather would you consider the egg marketing board?

I don't question that the cost to tourists coming here are too high. I believe the costs to everyone are too high. I am convinced that the costs of most everything we purchase are far too high, but I think one would have to be very shortsighted, indeed, to blame all costs on the business community.

There is a far more important aspect to all this and that is the very real possibility of the tourist industry on Vancouver Island being largely wiped out. It is well known that many operators did not survivie 1976 and I believe that unless we see a marked upsurge in 1977 many more will fail.

In the positive spirit, I am happy to be able to inform you, sir, that my room rates for the third year running will not be increased and my staff and I are working on menus which will keep the prices to our visitors fair and reasonable. Now if I could just think of some way to finance a trip for Jack Davis that was of very considerable duration! — Don Wray, Coachman Inn, 229 Gorge Road East.

Corrections Unit

I was not satisfied with the coverage (Neighbors Oppose Home For Women, Times March 9) given the meeting concerning the proposed corrections unit on Graham Street. A reporter should have been present to get his impressions firsthand.

There were several people present who voiced a willingness to accept the unit. Some (including my husband) did not have a chance to voice an opinion. Even Mr. Jacks was rudely interrupted and toward the end of the meeting literally gave up trying to answer questions.

Some of the arguments put forward were nothing less than hysterical. One man was worried that his children would be taken hostage. Several were worried about property values. I live within a stone's throw of this house and I know that this is not exactly a classy neighborhood.

If this house was sold to speculators it would become hopelessly run down and the tenants might not be desirable types. It is not suitable for a small family. With the house run under strict supervision with eight young women inmates serving sentences for non-violent offences the neighbors could be assured that the house would be kept in reasonable repair and that the inmates of the house would not be a nuisance. The inmates would be at jobs during the day and some would be serving sentences only on weekends — Mrs. Wm. Doherty, 2745 Fifth Street.

Downtown Hospital

According to an article in the Times Feb. 28, the 1971 census figures showed one in every five Victorians as being over the age of 65. In the James Bay area, the concentration was even higher, as an estimated 4,000 of the area's 10,000 residents were in this age group.

A recent circular from the B.C. Heart Foundation advises that half of all heart attack deaths occur before arrival at the hospital and adds that one should be prepared to act in case of emergency.

If one can assume that the above-quoted figures were accurate and have not greatly changed since that date, it seems only reasonable to suppose that there will be a greater incidence of heart trouble and other medical problems requiring emergency care among the elderly of the James Bay area than in the other districts of this city.

One wonders, therefore, if the emergency facility at the Jubilee Hospital will be enlarged to cope with the increase traffic before and not after the Victoria General becomes a chronic care facility.

Is this government prepared for an increase in the number of those going into the Jubilee's records as "dead on arrival"? I sincerely hope that the provincial government has given consideration to this concentration of elderly persons in the James Bay district in making its decision to close the Victoria General Hospital as an acute care facility. — Peter Gage, 250 Douglas Street.

Observatory

The directors of this society were extremely pleased when they read your editorial Save White Lake (Feb. 26) editorial. It was not only a needed spur to our local Penticton Herald, but was unusually well-written and to the point. We cannot thank you enough—not only for your strong support but for the factual and effective way you presented it.

We have again written to Premier Bennett. It would seem likely he will act on the proposal we made, and "use his new-found rapport with Ottawa." Certainly a copy of your editorial will go to Prime Minister Trudeau and may shake him up a bit. It should!

You couldn't have done a better journalistic job—it is easily the best we have had from any newspaper.

Thank you again.—Mrs. Doreen Adams, chairman, Astrophysical Observatory Committee, Okanagan Similkameen Parks Society.

Momentous

The government decision-makers, from high in their secluded ivory tower, have once again made a momentous decision. This time to reduce the ferry fares, with some provisos. Winter fares only, Monday to Thursday.

Once again, forget the working man who isn't free to travel at these times. The unemployed, an every increasing breed in vibrant, exciting Socred B.C., have little enough money to travel any time of the week or year.

So once again the majority of the people get nothing of the government's largesse. You have to be a mining company or an oil company for that.

Thanks for almost nothing. — Ferry Traveller.

McCarthy Daffodil

An award of a "McCarthy daffydil" to wear in his or her navel for the writer of the March 3 Times editorial Sun, Sand and Surf. It shouldn't look at all out of place in the Alice in wonderland atmosphere that prevades the Douglas Street playland quite often. Or, better still, add real color and a more pleasant scent to the B.C. legislative chamber by placing this Thinker of Great Thoughts as the centrepiece attraction in a bower of McCarthy daffydils, displayed on the floor of that sanctuary for those who ruminate over what's best for British Columbians (politically best, of course). Or maybe flower power can meet the energy needs of our neighbors to the south in the Excited States!—G. I. Powell, (Fun and Games Archivist), 1680 Poplar Street.

Terrorism: Protection Means Loss of Freedom

By HAYNES JOHNSON
Washington Post

The crime of our times is complex. It is a crime in which the actors struggle to commandeer all the mechanisms of mass communications and all the people, from presidents to lowliest citizens, become participants.

All are pawns, all seem almost powerless in the face of the latest in the series of acts of terrorism.

That's what was being hammered home once again last week in Washington.

In an earlier time, the classic crime was all in the family, when Cain slew Abel. Classic in its simplicity: passion, jealousy, rage, revenge. What we might call today, in these inelegant times, "a one-on-one."

But with increasing frequency we have witnessed crimes of terror around the world. The hooded terrorists in Munich, the cowering hostages in Uganda, the strange names of the terrorists, groups from the Symbionese Liberation Army to the Hanafi — all are part of the same story. By now, the techniques are disturbingly familiar: the seizure of hostages, the strident demands, the anguished hours of waiting, the often tragic denouement. And each time the drama is played out, live and in color, for all to experience.

Last Wednesday's events followed the current script. They thrust forward again the persistent, virtually unanswerable question: Why?

Why, on a balmy, sunny, benign day after the harshest winter in history, did the violence burst forth so suddenly and shockingly? Why have so many similar events been occurring so often recently? What is the proper course for officials, including presidents, to follow? To what extent do television and films and newspapers contribute to the phenomenon?

Consider the web that ensnared both President Carter and the public in only a few hours Wednesday. The president was half-way through his news conference when he was asked a question about a gunman holding a hostage in Ohio. Was he concerned that by agreeing to talk to the gunman he might set a precedent? Yes, he was, the president quite properly said. He had weighed the factors, appreciated the dilemmas, and made his decision. He knew "it is perhaps a dangerous precedent to establish."

What he did not know was that that episode would be instantly overtaken by even grimmer scenes a few blocks from the White House.

President Carter was caught in one of the cruelest dilemmas facing leaders in these days of mass violence and mad cases of captors and hostages. Publicity is the goal of most hostage takers, and to be recognized by a president is a prime success. Yet human lives are at stake, and a lack of response could result in death.

A leading Washington psychiatrist believes a major element in the rash of hostage-takers lies in the media attention they receive. The more coverage the more the increase in other cases, suggests Dr. Joseph Novello of the Psychiatric Institute of Washington.

Novello is concerned that the president's words Wednesday conceivably could trigger further incidents.

"I shuddered when I heard the president's press conference and heard him say he was going to talk to that fellow in Cleveland," he said.

"I don't have all the information the president had and he may have saved that policeman's life — but on the national and international level it could be an open invitation," Novello said. "I think it necessary that he make an announcement immediately that he is not going to deal with any terrorist group or individual hostage-taker. It sets a dangerous precedent. He's going to spend a lot of time on the telephone with terrorists unless he corrects his position."

The other side of that equation deals directly with the press. Since the wave of organized terrorist activities caught the world's attention, most notably at Munich during the 1972 Olympics, the techniques have been refined and perfected. They fall into clearly definable patterns.

An airplane is hijacked and demands issued, a building is seized and the hostages are displayed, even interviewed. A community, and a country, and at times the entire world become caught up in the drama.

But common techniques aside, a critical difference exists between the international terrorists and those we are now facing more and more in the U.S. Here individual hostage takers seldom gain anything except momentary publicity. They do not go free.

In Cleveland, that gunman who wanted to speak to the president released his hostage and was immediately arrested. In Indianapolis, another held a hostage with a shotgun wired to his neck. At the end he freed the hostage and — despite promises of amnesty — was immediately arrested.

That is the common pattern. Not so, for overseas terrorists. Some 80 per cent of them go free, the State Department estimates. They are given asylum in friendly countries, and that is that. The recent case in France where the officials released a prime suspect in the Munich murders is an example.

Publicity crosses the oceans and unites both camps of terrorists at home and abroad to command the attention of the media and thereby the public.

In these turbulent days, an army of experts has grown up around the question of violence in America.

It is being studied and debated constantly. A steady flow of commission reports and dissertations gathers dust on library shelves. But inevitably the questions turn inward. Mass violence is the theme of the mass media. Patty Hearst spawned a television drama — or did the television drama spawn Patty Hearst's drama? To what extent does life imitate art, and art influence life?

There are those who believe that violence on television sets the stage for the terror in these times. Patrick Mulaney, of the FBI's behavioral science unit, recalled a television show in which youths set a man on fire. The exact incident was repeated by youths in Massachusetts.

"Twenty years ago," he said "no one would have thought killing someone or taking hostage was a viable action for whatever was bothering you. But people see that 'reality' every night in TV dramas."

Whatever the explanations or theories, no one yet has an acceptable answer on dealing with the rise of terror. Prof. Marvin Wolfgang, of the University of Pennsylvania, a nationally known criminoligist, said one thing should be kept in mind: Publicity aside, the goal of the terrorists is simple, he said. "They want to instigate fear."

That they have accomplished. And they have accomplished something else. Once again they have brought into question perhaps the most difficult of the democratic dilemmas — how to preserve individual freedom and liberty and yet at the same time maintain collective security amid the rising spectre of violent terrorism.

Up to now, the reaction has been to add layer after layer of security onto American life. We submit to searches at airports, we show our passes at offices, we permit checks of a personal nature in a myriad of ways unknown in the past. As Wednesday's events demonstrated anew many of these provide only a facade.

Now, at the least, one thing is certain. The protective cordon around our public and private buildings, our airports and planes — and around our lives — will grow tighter. It's one of the unhappy prices of citizenship in the Seventies, it seems.

'Moral Authority' Asserted

By HEDRICK SMITH
New York Times

President Carter's decision to reduce foreign aid to three Third World countries is a clear break with the pragmatism practiced by American presidents in foreign affairs during the postwar era.

By announcing the sanctions against Argentina, Ethiopia and Uruguay, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance has underscored the president's assertion at his news conference last month that this is a global policy, not directed solely at the Soviet Union. And this has taken some of the sting out of the administration's earlier sharp criticism of Moscow on this issue.

But the moves reached beyond the tactics of relations with the Kremlin. They represent a down payment on what Carter's aides describe as his almost theological commitment to restore what he has called "the moral authority" of American foreign policy by speaking out on issues of human rights and personal liberty.

Like Woodrow Wilson, who wanted to make the world safe for democracy and to whom the new president is sometimes compared for his moral bent, Carter has asserted that American foreign policy must reflect the values of the American people. "Because we are free," he said in his Inaugural Address, "we can never be indifferent to the fate of freedom elsewhere."

But for generations, American foreign policy has reflected a dichotomy in the American spirit between morality and pragmatism.

The basic rationale of American aid programs in the postwar era, for example, was to supply assistance to friendly countries in the interest of containing communism and in spite of American distaste for the repressive tendencies of some of its allies and foreign aid clients.

In recent years, as Congress became increasingly disillusioned and offended by this realpolitik approach, the White House and state department resisted pressure from Capitol Hill to cut off foreign aid in moral protest over the abuse of human rights in countries like South Korea, Iran, the Philippines, Chile or Argentina.

In late 1975, when the Congress passed an amendment to the foreign aid bill requiring the administration to justify military assistance to countries where there were repeated "gross violations" of human rights, the administration rebuffed the measure in language that reflected the thinking of former Secretary of State Kissinger.

CARTER

"In view of the widespread nature of human-rights violations in the world," the state department declared, "we have found no adequately objective way to make distinctions of degree between nations. This fact leads us, therefore, to the conclusion that neither the United States security interest nor the human-rights cause would be properly served by the public obloquy and impaired relations with security-assistance recipient countries that would follow the making of inherently subjective United States government determinations that 'gross' violations do or do not exist or that a 'consistent' pattern of such violations does or does not exist in such countries."

The Kissinger approach, to the Soviet Union and other countries, too, was that the cause of human rights is best served by "quiet but forceful diplomacy."

Almost from its first day in office, the Carter administration broke precedent by its outspokenness on the issue of human rights in the international arena.

Paradoxically, it was a parallel though different moral thrust to foreign policy which drew earlier American presidents into fateful foreign policy adventures. The basic impulse of American intervention in Vietnam was to save the Vietnamese from communism, both for strategic and moral-ideological reasons. But the intervention foundered on moral controversy over the conduct of the war and the morality of supporting a Saigon regime that incarcerated some of its political foes in "tiger cages."

This spirit of interventionism, cloaked by concern for human rights, fired the opposition of those who feared the moral impulse in Washington would engender foreign entanglements costly to the nation.

Indeed, with American involvement in the Vietnam war already in its fifth year, it was another humanitarian intervention that helped produce the reaction in Congress that eventually led to limits on presidential powers in foreign affairs.

In July, 1967, President Johnson ordered three American C-130 transports flown to Katanga on a mercy mission to save innocent civilians after Congolese rebels and mercenaries had taken the lives of some Catholic nuns. That intervention prompted Georgia's conservative late Senator Richard B. Russell to join forces with J. William Fulbright, the Arkansas Democrat who repeatedly criticized the American penchant for trying to project American values on other nations, against the moral thrust of foreign policy in the White House.

The two men pushed through the resolution on national commitments, a move that led eventually to the War Powers Act which restricted presidential power to undertake military action abroad without the declared support of Congress.

Another burst of congressional assertiveness — with the Senate asserting its moral concerns against a reluctant Republican administration — put an obstacle in the path of developing economic relations with Moscow in the late 1974 by making easier credit and terms of trade dependent on Soviet pledges to permit high levels of Jewish emigration and to halt harassment of Soviet Jews who applied to emigrate.

It is this kind of sentiment in Congress with which Carter is aligning himself, though the issue of Soviet Jewish emigration has not yet forcefully been raised. In a sense, by his criticism of other countries on human rights issues and by the aid reductions recently announced, Carter is positioning himself potentially to make a more forceful case on Jewish emigration than his predecessors.

But Cyrus Vance announced the difficulties of absolute consistency on human rights issues when he said that in the case of allies like South Korea and the Philippines, human rights considerations would be secondary to strategic interests.

Similarly with Moscow, there may come a time when the delicacy of the strategic arms talks or other negotiations temper the president's clear commitment to make protection of human rights a hallmark of his diplomacy. But he has now set his general course.

Nibbling Away at Freedom

TORONTO STAR
An Editorial

Canadians who take it for granted that we live in a free, democratic society should look carefully at the report by an Ottawa parliamentary committee on the way the federal government has increasingly been running your lives by arbitrary regulation.

The facts cited by the joint Senate-House of Commons committee show that we already have a system of national government which is in many ways oppressive and careless of the basic principles of the rule of law.

The wider meaning of the report — which applies equally to provincial and municipal governments — is a clear warning that freedom and individual rights can be nibbled away by small acts of bureaucratic authority just as effectively in the long run as they can be swept aside by undemocratic political action.

The rule of law is the foundation of our free society. It means that every citizen has both his duties and privileges laid out clearly by the legislative actions of his freely elected representatives, and that all citizens are treated equally in the application of the law.

Many jurists — notably former Ontario Chief Justice James McRuer — have drawn attention that too many modern laws, instead of spelling out what is required, set up various kinds of tribunals or even assign power to individuals to interpret and apply the intention of the legislation.

McRuer recently pointed out that there are now some 300 boards and tribunals under the various levels of government in Canada. He cited one — the B.C. Labor Board — whose decisions have even been removed from any review by the courts, and which has been given absolute power to decide itself where and when it has power to act.

The Ottawa parliamentary committee has been reviewing a total of no less than 14,000 regulations and discretionary powers the government and its agencies have imposed.

Some of them are blatant invasions of private rights and fundamental legal safeguards. Government inspectors, for example, have the power to require any information they choose from turkey and hog growers, and to inspect their farms.

Immigration officers have the authority, under a set of secret guidelines, to reject applicants for entry to Canada without telling them why.

Other regulations arbitrarily establish privileged groups of citizens. Cabinet ministers and MPs, for example, are specially exempted from paying customs duty on official gifts received during trips abroad.

In other cases government agencies and ministers can make rulings without troubling to explain why. A frequent case is the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which can accept or reject investment projects without giving reasons.

Ontario provincial legislation also has established a wide range of authority to be exercised arbitrarily by ministers and bureaucrats. The public accounts committee at Queen's Park just recently examined a special exemption in a land sale from $660,000 tax which normally would have been payable under the land speculation tax.

The increasing interference by governments in the lives of ordinary citizens is burdensome enough, even though the complexity of modern society makes some of this necessary. But it becomes intolerable when power is exercised by a faceless bureaucracy whose decisions are without appeal to other authority, and too often without explanation.

Sherritt Gordon Ltd.

Sherritt Gordon Mines Ltd. announces it will dispense with its quarterly dividends and pay them only on an annual basis.

The company's board of directors said economic uncertainties, particularly as they affect sales prices, "make it extremely difficult to forecast the results for the year with confidence."

"At the current level of dividends, the directors are also concerned with the excessive cost of sending out thousands of small cheques four times a year," they said.

The dividend for 1977 will be considered late in the year, the company said.

Pipe Firm Braced

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co. is prepared to spend $300 million constructing a new 30-inch line from Burnaby to Edmonton if Ottawa approves shipment of Alaska oil through the line, president K. L. Hall said today.

It would run parallel to the existing 24-inch line.

Hall said "twinning" the pipeline would be phase two of a project to transfer Alaska oil to the U.S. midwest through Canadian pipes.

Phase one, reversing the flow in the existing pipeline to send Alaska oil from Washington State through B.C. to Edmonton, was announced in February.

Hall, in an interview, said today there is a second phase involving the construction of 610 miles of pipeline from Burnaby to Edmonton.

Phase one, the reversal of oil flow, could begin in 1978 if the national energy board gives its approval.

The second phase, construction of a new pipeline, could also begin next year — if the NEB approves and markets are confirmed in the United States.

He said the twinned line would have a capacity of 650,000 barrels per day compared with the present capacity of 200,000.

Only one-third the present capacity is being used to send Alberta oil to B.C. refineries. The B.C. refineries would continue to be served by alternating the flow of oil from Edmonton. Alaska oil is not of a suitable quality for the lower mainland plants.

The existing pipeline, from Burnaby to Edmonton, is 710 miles long. The 30-inch twin, however, would need only 610 miles of construction because 100 miles of 30-inch pipe has already been laid. There is a 50-mile section from the Edson area into Jasper Park and another 50-mile line north from Kamloops. The lines were laid to serve local needs.

Hall said studies have already been completed on the pipeline construction proposal and the company is only waiting for approval from Ottawa and the U.S. refineries which would buy the oil. The company would not have to get export permits because it would be sending Alaska oil, not Canadian oil, into the United States.

Hall said the total cost of the two phases would be from $100 to $150 million less than a proposal to construct a pipeline from Kitimat to Edmonton, which would be in the range of $500 million.

New pumping facilities to reverse the flow in the existing line would cost $125 million and twinning would cost upwards of $300 million but because some second-stage work could be done in the first phase the two processes together could be done as low as $350 million, he said.

Ban Municipal Gifts, Lea Asks Government

The provincial government should not allow private corporations to influence municipalities with cash donations, Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) said Tuesday.

Lea told the legislature that a $25,000 donation to a municipal convention from Kitimat Pipeline Ltd. is a type of practice that should be stopped.

The company, which backs the proposed Kitimat-Edmonton oil pipeline, gave the money to the North Central Municipal Association on condition that the cruise ship on which the convention will take place in May travels the route oil tankers would follow if an oil port is built at Kitimat.

Lea asked the premir if he would authorize the government to contribute $25,000 to environmental groups so that they would not be at an unfair advantage.

Bennett did not reply.

Earlier, Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis said he is aware of the municipalities' intention to charter the Princess Patricia for their convention, but said he was unaware of the $25,000 gift.

Kitimat Mayor George Thom called the donation a plum, allowing convention participants an extra day to view first hand the Douglas Channel access route.

Moonlighting Profs Tossed To Council

Education Minister Pat McGeer has given the Universities Council of B.C. the responsibility of solving the controversy over moonlighting university professors.

McGeer said in a letter to William Armstrong, chairman of the council, he is asking it "to study the situation and to forward to me and to the institutions involved any recommendations which the council may wish to put forward concerning this matter."

The minister said in the March 8 letter, released Tuesday, that the council should "consider this problem in depth," and that funding from the ministry of education would be available to help prepare the study.

The controversy arose after published reports that many university professors are earning large sums of money in work outside their universities while retaining their university salary.

Last month, McGeer sent telegrams to each university president in B.C. asking for a statement of policy on the situation.

He forwarded the replies with the letter to Dr. Armstrong.

HYDRO QUERIED

B.C. Hydro will be one of the first crown corporations to appear before the all-party legislative public accounts committee.

At a meeting Tuesday, committee members decided that Hydro will be one of the first corporations they want to review.

Members also made moves to call representatives of the Insurance Corp. of B.C., spokesmen for the government's superannuation fund, and Mason Gaffney, former head of the now-defunct Economic Policy Analysis Institute of B.C.

Record 12,000 New Firms Incorporated in B.C.

Incorporation of new companies in B.C. in 1976 increased 20 per cent over 1975, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Rafe Mair said Tuesday.

"For the first time in history, more than 12,000 new companies have been registered in one year by the companies branch," Mair said in a news release.

"The increase in the number of incorporations indicates growing confidence in the economy and is an accurate barometer of business and commercial activity within the province," he said.

Mair said extra-provincial company registration is also up 21 per cent, "an indication that business is moving into the province."

The minister said amendments to the Companies Act, effective August 1976, provided for the transfer of a corporation to or from reciprocating jurisdictions. During the period covered, three B.C. firms moved out of the province while three companies transferred their operations to B.C.

"Not only have incorporations increased in number, but they have also increased in rate," Mair said. "Usually, the peak months for incorporations are April, May and June and then the pace slackens.

"In 1976 the number remained constant throughout summer and fall and actually increased in November and December."

Korean Charity 'A Bum Outfit'

NEW YORK (AP) — The husband-and-wife co-owners of Reader's Digest magazine contributed $502,000 to a South Korean charity before they learned it was "a bum outfit and . . . stopped giving," their corporate counsel says. DeWitt and Lila Acheson Wallace gave the money between 1966 and 1975 to the Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation which last week was barred from further soliciting in New York state.

Begging on Victoria Street 'Initiative' Says Vander Zalm

The opposition in legislature Tuesday turned an off-the-cuff remark by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm into the basis for a non-confidence motion.

During debate on Vander Zalm's budgetary estimates, Barbara Wallace (NDP—Cowichan-Malahat) said she had seen a beggar on a Victoria street earlier in the day and that he was playing a harmonica for money.

"That's initiative," said Vander Zalm in across-the-floor banter.

Wallace immediately expressed outrage at the remark and, following a two-hour adjournment, NDP human resources critic Rosemary Brown introduced the motion of non-confidence.

The motion was to reduce Vander Zalm's annual salary by $1.

"Does he have any shame, sense of guilt, any concern for the fact that in this . . . city, there are people on the street begging?" she asked.

"Beggars are people with initiative," said Brown mockingly. "What does that say about a government that forces a person to beg?"

She said that the underprivileged in B.C. are subject to "the shuffle, the mystery of inscrutable paperwork" when attempting to deal with the Social Credit government.

"It is a shame we have beggars, but it is disgraceful we have a minister who refers to begging as a sign of initiative," Brown said.

Vander Zalm said he thought it was "wrong to refer to that particulart person as a beggar."

"I frankly believe that person may be doing his thing," he said, adding he thought Wallace's description was an insult and he'd go out and apologize on her behalf.

A series of NDP MLAs then rose to chastise Vander Zalm for his remark and for the manner in which he has handled his ministry.

Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) said the remark was an indication of a return to the attitude prevalent at the turn of the century when initiative was backed at any cost.

"Are we going back to the days of abuse of our fellow man?" Cocke asked, adding that Vander Zalm's remark "capsulizes everything this minister of human resources stands for."

Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) accused Vander Zalm of acting like former United States senator Joe McCarthy, who conducted an anti-Communist campaign in the early 1950s.

Lea said the minister's prime concern was to "get lots of publicity" and not the welfare of the needy in the province.

VANDER ZALM

'Overdrugging' Monitored

There were about 100 bottles and Vander Zalm told the legislature they had all been prescribed for one Vancouver woman over three months.

In fact, he said, 1,200 pills were prescribed for the woman over a period of six weeks and many of the prescriptions were given only a day or two apart.

The woman, the minister said, died of an overdose of drugs. Her family, clearing out her suite in Vancouver, found the cache of pills and turned them over to the government as an example of what can happen.

Evidence like this is terribly upsetting," he said.

Instances of "overdrugged" patients show up particularly in nursing homes, but under a drug-monitoring program in effect since July, the usage of prescription drugs in nursing homes has been reduced in some cases by as much as 50 per cent.

The monitoring program, Vander Zalm said, is now in effect in about one-third of all institutions such as nursing and extended care homes governed by the provincial government, and should be in effect in all such homes sometime this summer.

Under the program, pharmacists must keep a list of all drugs prescribed under a patitnt's name to prevent duplication of prescriptions and overuse of drugs.

One nursing home, the minister said, is trying to get away from the use of drugs by providing sherry to the patients as a relaxant and has found it effective.

"They found the residents completely happy," he said.

PREMIER STALKED BY VANDER ZALM?

Premier Bill Bennett was warned by opposition members Tuesday to "Beware the Ides of March" and to watch out for "Brutus Vander Zalm" who has designs on the premier's job.

"The premier should beware the Ides of March (March 15)," NDP MLA Barbara Wallace (Cowichan-Malahat) warned.

"This minister (Vander Zalm) is like no other," she said, speaking during debate on the spending estimates of Vander Zalm's office.

"He is very interested in moving into the position of premier."

U.S. Restores U.N. Sanctions On Rhodesia Chrome Imports

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Jimmy Carter won a major foreign policy victory when the U.S. Senate sent him — in time for his forthcoming speech to the United Nations — a bill to cut off imports of Rhodesian chrome.

By a bote of 66 to 26, the Senate passed legislation repealing the law under which the United States has bought chrome from Rhodesia in defiance of U.N. sanctions. The House already had approved the bill.

Carter not only wanted the so-called Byrd amendment repealed, but wanted it in time to announce at his U.S. speech Thursday. He reportedly intends to hail the action as proof of the administration's commitment to black majority rule in the southern African country.

The U.N. economic sanctions were imposed after the government declared unilateral independence from Britain in 1965 rather than agree to eventual majority black rule.

Before repealing the legislation, the Senate defeated a series of amendments by Byrd and Sen. James Allen (D-Ala.). Byrd did get a 93-0 vote for an amendment permitting resumption of Rhodesian chrome imports any time the president believes it would promote peace there.

In Salisbury, Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith went on nationwide radio and accused the U.S. Congress of resorting to psychological pressure by moving to repeal the law. Smith spoke after the House acted but before the Senate vote.

Calling for "strong hearts ... courage and determination," Smith said, "the repeal will have a minimal effect on our economy."

ARMS BUDGET HIKE WANTED

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. House armed services committee tentatively plans to recommend an $819 million increase in President Jimmy Cart'ers defence budget, restoring a number of aircraft and weapons cuts sought by the administration, it was learned today.

Congressional sources said the increase would boost the defence budget to about $121.1 billion from Carter's proposed level of $120.4 billion.

Third Crime King Called

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The U.S. House assassinations committee secretly subpoenaed crime figure Santo Trafficante Jr. for its first hearing today into the murder of president John Kennedy, according to informed sources.

Once the overlord of syndicate gambling in Cuba, Trafficante is the only surviving member of a gangland trio that was secretly enlisted by the Central Intelligence Agency in 1960 in efforts to kill Cuban Premier Fidel Castro.

The other two men were described as Mafia members Sam (Momo) Giancana, who was shot to death in his suburban Chicago home two years ago, and his longtime lieutenant, Johnny Rosselli, whose decomposed body was found last summer in an oil drum floating in the backwaters of Miami's Biscayne Bay.

Trafficante is expected to protest the compulsory appearance and reportedly has hired Boston lawyer, F. Lee Bailey to represent him.

Giancana, 65, was murdered on the heels of preliminary efforts by the Senate Intelligence Committee to contact him in its investigation of CIA assassination plots.

The dapper Rosselli testified before the Senate committee five days after Giancana was killed. Thirteen months later he disappeared.

Babysitter Beats Tot To Death

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Psychiatrists say Tommy Albrecht, 13, learned about violence through his father's threats and thrashings. Now Tommy faces five years in state custody for beating to death a three-year-old girl.

Juvenile Court Judge John Miller ordered Tommy turned over to the Division of Youth Services Tuesday after denying an insanity plea and finding him guilty of manslaughter.

The boy was charged with second-degree murder for hitting and kicking Staci Chubin to death last Oct. 26 after he spent 20 hours babysitting the child. The judge reduced the charge to manslaughter.

"Beating Tommy was his (father's) answer to everything," the boy's mother, Jean Albrecht, told the court. "He was always throwing things—a hammer or a rocking chair—at Tommy, if not Tommy himself."

She said that as Tommy grew older, he began to imitate his father, displaying a violent temper and beating his sister.

Although Tommy had received treatment at a psychiatric centre, administrators at his elementary school placed him in a special class for emotionally disturbed children after repeated incidents with classmates.

Records indicate he seemed to be getting better last year. He maintained a solid B average in Grade 7.

Mrs. Albrecht gave him permission to sit for the two Chubin girls, aged 3 and 6, while her friend, Judy Chubin, went out for the evening.

The next morning Tommy was confronted by Mrs. Chubin's estranged husband, Steve, who was angered because he didn't like boys babysitting his daughters, psychiatrists said. One doctor said an incident between the two led to a sudden reaction from Tommy.

After Chubin left with the six-year-old, the boy said he kicked Staci in the stomach, sending her backwards over a piece of furniture. He kicked her again and hit her at least once before carrying her to bed. The child died a few hours later.

Boyle Released, Awaits Retrial

MEDIA, Pa. (UPI) — Ailing former United Mine Workers President W. A. (Tony) Boyle, 75, will be released from prison Thursday to await a new trial in the murder of union rival Joseph Yablonski, his wife and daughter.

Boyle was sentenced to three life terms for the contract murders.

The state Supreme Court on Jan. 28 ordered that Boyle be retried because Judge Francis Catania had refused to permit the testimony of Thomas Kane, a government auditor, during Boyle's two-week trial in April 1974.

The defence said Kane's testimony was pertinent since it would have supported a defence contention that two Kentucky UMW officials wanted Yablonski murdered.

Major Concessions Urged for U.S. Indians

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A two-year congressional review of policy toward American Indians has recommended that tribes be given full legal power to run their own affairs, including the right to tax citizens, try offenders in tribal courts, and control waterways, fishing and hunting on their reservations.

A report to be released this week by the American Indian Policy Review Commission asserts that federal policy ought to guarantee tribal governments have all the power held by non-Indian local governments.

It also strongly criticizes the Bureau of Indian Affairs for misrepresenting Indians, and proposes it be replaced by an independent agency. The Department of Interior, which now includes the BIA, has too many conflicts of interest with its land and water programs to defend Indian rights fairly, it concludes.

The report's more than 100 recommendations, many of them controversial, propose a radical transformation of Indian rights, supporting almost all of the Indian claims to tribal sovereignty that have become popular since the late 1960s.

Many recommendations conflict directly with non-Indian interests. The right to try non-Indians in tribal courts is opposed in a series of court tests now underway. Tribal trials of non-Indians should be a long-range goal but not a priority matter for legislation, the report states.

Whites who live on or near Indian reservations in the West have resented tribal attempts to impose taxes and business licences, which the commission said is proper. In addition white commercial interests in the West are frequently in conflict with Indians over water rights. The commission recommends control by tribal councils over water on their reservations.

The commission was established by Congress in 1975 and includes five tribal representatives and six members of Congress. Its chairman is Sen. James Abourezk (Dem.-S.D.). The report is to be circulated to 1,100 organizations for comment before going to Congress on May 18. Its charter stipulates that congressional committees must consider the recommendations within two years.

A strong dissent was filed by one member, Rep. Lloyd Meeds (Dem.-Wash.). He said the report calls for "an unwarranted extension of the concept of sovereignty which Indians have been trying to forward for some time and some of its suggestions are so unrealistic as to subject it to ridicule. For example, it suggests that Indian tribes have jurisdiction over non-Indians on reservations — to tax them. I am violently opposed to that. Non-Indians don't have any participation in the decision-making. You know we fought a revolutionary war over that."

POT USE PENALTY CUT URGED

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws says he's tired of being treated like a criminal just because he smokes marijuana.

And Sen. Jacob Javits (Rep. — N.Y.), said while he personally considers smoking marinuana "bad . . . eating a real rich dessert could be a killer" and that's no crime.

And Jerome Hornblass, of the commission of the Addiction Services Agency in New York, says children are questioning the logic of a law that "imprisons them for smoking marijuana while mom and dad get drunk on alcohol."

These were just a few of the views expressed Tuesday during the second day of hearings by the house select committee on narcotics abuse and control on legislation to remove the threat of arrest and jail for personal use of marijuana.

Penalties for drug peddlers would not change.

The bill would make use, possession and the non-profit transfer of up to one ounce of marijuana subject to a citation similar to a traffic ticket and a fine of no more than $100. Sponsors believe states would follow suit if pot were decriminalized on a federal level.

"Those of us who smoke marijuana do not deserve to be treated like criminals," said Keith Stroup, the head of NORML. "The vast majority of us are neither radical nor criminal. We are otherwise law abiding citizens who happen to enjoy smoking marijuana."

NORML also believes the estimated 15 million Americans who regularly smoke pot should be allowed to grow their own for personal consumption, providing a legal source of marijuana.

Javits and Reps. Edward Koch (Dem. — N.Y.), and Yvonne Burke (Dem. — Calif.) said they thought decriminalization might help young people regain respect for drug laws.

Flights New York to Calif. Now $227

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Three airlines will start Thursday selling round-trip tickets on transcontinental flights for as little as $227 for adults and $206 for children, about half the normal price.

The "Super Saver" discount fares are being offered on American Airlines, Trans World Airlines and United Airlines flights between New York and California as a one-year experiment to see if scheduled airlines can cut prices and still make a profit.

The idea was American's. It said the low fare should encourage many travellers to fly for the first time and predicted the increased volume will boost annual profits by $3.5 million despite the lower price per ticket.

The Civil Aeronautics Board, despite misgivings, ap- Tuesday. TWA and United had opposed the idea, but proved American's proposal both quickly announced after the board acted they would match the competition.

All three airlines will put Super Saber tickets on sale Thursday, but the CAB said the first travel on the low-cost tickets cannot take place until April 24 because tickets must be purchased at least a month in advance.

It lets adults fly round trip from coast to coast for between $227 and $268, a saving of between 35 and 45 per cent, with the cost depending on the day of travel. Children can travel at any time for $206.

To qualify for the discount, passengers must buy tickets and make reservations at least 30 days in advance and stay at their destination between 7 and 45 days. They would travel in coach seats on scheduled flights.

The lowest adult fare — $227 — is for travel on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The cost on Monday and Friday is $247. Flights on Saturday and Sunday, the most popular travel days, will cost $268.

American's request — and the board's approval — came at a time when both the airline industry and the CAB are under fire for failing to cut the cost of air travel. Critics say CAB regulation has allowed the airlines to avoid price competition, which might bring about lower ticket costs.

U.S. Genetic Research Law Urged

WASHINGTON (WP) — A new law to require federal licensing of laboratories that combine genetic material to make novel forms of life has been urged by a committee representing 16 U.S. federal agencies.

If passed, such a law would for the first time let the government dictate what kind of basic research a scientist could and could not do.

The committee, according to government sources, recommended that the secretary of health, education and welfare (HEW) regulate and inspect both public and commercial laboratories doing such work and that federal law supersede any local rules like those passed last month in Cambridge, Mass.

The committee recommendation, made in closed session, will be sent to HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. Tuesday.

Scientists and committee members have worried about what many call the "awesome" precedent of letting the government decide what a scientist may or may not do.

Laws now regulate research involving human beings, and they require laboratories to obey safety standards. Scientists must be licensed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to use radioactive isotopes. The government heavily influences research by deciding what it will fund.

But no law other than general safety standards ever has governed scientists working in so esoteric a field as combining the DNA or deoxyribonucleic acid — the basic genetic material — of different organisms.

Scientists themselves first called attention to the potential risks of joining DNA from different creatures — and, specifically, in the research inserting mammal and other genes into colonies of bacteria.

They agreed to avoid experiments that might create new diseases or adversely affect human, animal or plant genetics.

In September former president Gerald Ford named the inter-agency group to decide whether the guidelines should become law and also apply to private firms. He named representatives from the White House, HEW, agriculture, defense, commerce, labor, interior, justice, state transportation departments and energy, environmental and science agencies, with Dr. Donald Fredrickson, NIH director, as chairman.

That Congress in general should:

—Require registry, licensing and inspection of all laboratories where the so-called "recombinant DNA" research is conducted.

—Apply federal rather than state or local laws in a city like Cambridge, Mass., which already has forbidden some types of this research. Scientists fear that a patchwork of local laws will negate progress.

—Provide a mechanism to let private firms, for example drug makers, keep some work secret until they apply for patents, although the HEW secretary could determine what projects are eligible.

FISH KILL LAWSUIT

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A $2.1 million lawsuit on behalf of Washington's 5,000 commercial salmon fishermen has been filed in U.S. federal court over a massive fish kill on the Columbia River last year.

The lawsuit, a class action filed by 11 commercial fishermen, names as defendants the Washington Public Power Supply System, United Engineers and Constructors Inc., and the state department of fisheries.

The suite originally was filed in Thurston County superior court earlier this month, but defendants asked that it be transferred to U.S. district court because the fish kill occurred on federal property.

More than 13 million fish were destroyed last April when the Columbia River flow was lowered below Priest Rapids Dam near the Hanford Reservation, exposing spawning salmon.

The water was lowered for tests on the water intake mechanisms for two WPPSS nuclear plants and was not returned to its previous level before the salmon and their eggs were killed, the lawsuit charges.

The lawsuit cites a study showing 10 per cent of the destroyed eggs — 135,370 — would have survived to migrate downstream. Another study indicated that one per cent of the migrated fish — 13,537 — would have returned to spawn as adult fish.

The lawsuit concludes that allowing for various factors, including treaty Indian fisheries, the state's commercial fishermen will be denied a catch of about 61,000 fish because of the kill.

They figured earnings of about $35 for each fish, thus the loss figure of $2.1 million.

The fishermen also claim unspecified damages for the Hanford Reach fish run which they say provides 37 per cent of the spawning area. The lawsuit said the extent of the damage has not been determined, but it will take several years to rebuild the run.

CBC Chief 'Unaware' of Any Bias

Times Ottawa Burea

OTTAWA — Canadian Broadcasting Corporation president Al Johnson insisted Tuesday he has not been conscious of any separatist bias in Radio-Canada that warrants an inquiry.

However, in view of general allegations that have been made, Johnson told a press conference, he feels an inquiry by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is justified "to clear the air."

Johnson said he found the comments about a separatist bias in Radio-Canada to be "quite distasteful."

The CBC received 45 complaints of alleged pro-separatist bias within the French-language network out of 3,899 letters received in the last year, he added.

Johnson said it will be almost impossible during the next three months for a committee of the CRTC, in completing the inquiry requested by Prime Minister Trudeau, to do much more than request hard evidence of bias and review evidence against the news and public affairs programs involved.

Johnson said he had been surprised and dismayed by the sudden eruption of cabinet complaints against Radio-Canada in recent weeks.

He also declared that he would quit as CBC president before he would bow to political pressure on CBC news and programming.

"The future of the CBC and of public broadcasting in Canada is at stake," Johnson stated.

In a related development one of the men chiefly responsible for giving CBC television news programming its "new look over the last couple of years is the centrepiece in an internal shuffle announced Tuesday by the corporation.

JOHNSON
. . . distasteful

Mike Daigneault is being shunted sideways April 1 to become director for English services in Quebec, a move seen by some CBC insiders as a fairly unsubtle bid to move Daigneault out of reach of the special committee that is investigation the corporation.

Daigneault was the "bright young man" pried from the Montreal Gazette in 1973 to boost the network's sagging ratings.

One of the things he instigated was the replacement of the "talking head" type of straight-forward newsmen with the new breed of "stars" who have injected a high degree of entertainment into TV news.

Meanwhile, it was learned Tuesday that Prime Minister Trudeau will not bring any hard evidence of any separatist bias in the CBC before the special inquiry committee which was set up at his own request.

Jean Charpentier, Trudeau's press secretary, said Tuesday that Trudeau will leave it to others in the Liberal Party to give the inquiry any evidence that they may have, "but he does not intent to intervene personally."

The refusal came in response to written appeals by CRTC chairman Harry Boyle to all members of Parliament for evidence of distortion in CBC French-language news and public affairs programs.

Boyle, who will conduct the inquiry, said the regulatory agency had no evidence of its own that employees of Radio-Canada, the French-language arm of the CBC, were slanting programs to support the separatist cause.

At least one other minister who publicly attacked the CBC will not offer evidence to the CRTC inquiry committee.

A spokesman for Revenue Minister Monique Begin said the minister never claimed to have hard evidence of pro-separatist bias although she heard general complaints about the CBC, like many other cabinet ministers.

Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet is on holidays this week and officials in his office do not know whether he will respond to the Boyle invitation.

Ouellet denied telling a Quebec newspaper that he has a list of separatist employees of Radio-Canada.

However he said last week he received "thousands" of complaints of pro-separatist bias from Radio-Canada television viewers.

Soviet Subs Would Crush Canadian Cities—Danson

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence Minister Barney Danson says that while it is possible to sink some Soviet nuclear missile submarines it would not be possible to sink enough to stop devastation of Canadian cities in the event of war.

He adds that the Soviet and United States missile submarine forces — the so-called second-strike capability of the two powers — are a valuable deterrent to war.

The minister was clarifying before the Commons defence committee statements he made on television last week that the second-strike Soviet force is vulnerable to attack from Western anti-submarine forces.

The statement was strongly criticized. Allan McKinnon of Victoria, Conservative defence critic, said in an interview the minister did not know what he was talking about.

Dr. C. G. Jacobsen, professor of strategic studies at Acadia University at Wolfville, N.S., and an acknowledged expert on anti-submarine warfare, said the second-strike capability is invulnerable now and certainly will be in the future.

Even within the Canadian military there was surprise about the minister's statement.

Answering questions in the committee from Dan McKenzie (PC-Winnipeg South Centre) and McKinnon, the minister said it is not Canadian strategy to seek out and destroy the submarine force but that it has limited capability to do that.

He said he finds satisfying the fact that it is possible to sink only a limited number of missile submarines because that means that both the West and the Soviet bloc must be afraid to start a nuclear war.

Gen. J. A. Dextraze, chief of defence staff, said it is impossible to detect and destroy all submarines.

McKinnon said one Soviet Delta submarine could destroy 16 Canadian cities. McKenzie said an American nuclear submarine could fire 30 missiles and there would be no way for the soviets to destroy them.

Submarine-launched missiles are called second strike becasue they can be fired from deep in the ocean after land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs) have been launched or destroyed.

Most authorities consider them invulnerable when they are at sea.

UVic Students Protest Fee Hike Talks March 21

The decision to hold the rally was made at a meeting Tuesday though several student spokesmen voiced opposition to the plan.

One student suggested a student delegation to the board of governors would have more effect.

Another agreed, saying mass demonstrations at the legislature opposing Autoplan increases had little effect, but a delegation of students managed to get some concessions from the government.

Other students suggested the university could trim expenditures in other areas to avoid tuition fee increases — the easiest way out for the university.

One student lobby has already been successful when it convinced the university senate to recommend to the board of governors not to increase fees.

However, university president Dr. Howard Petch has indicated he will be recommending a hike of 25 per cent to alleviate a shortfall in provincial grants.

A final decision will probably be made by the board at its March 21 meeting. Student leaders are hoping 300 to 400 students will turn up for the rally.

HOLDUP SUSPECT ARRESTED

A third juvenile wanted in connection with a robbery in Sidney last Saturday has been picked up.

A Sidney RCMP spokesman said the suspect — a 16-year-old boy — was located Tuesday morning.

The boy along with two others, aged 15 and 16, has been charged with the armed robbery of Paul Jody England, 18, of 8591 Lochside.

Police said England was delivering an order of Chinese food to an address on Fifth Street in Sidney when he was attacked by three youths who robbed him of his wallet containing $11.

The three juveniles have been released in the care of their parents and are expected to appear in family court later this week.

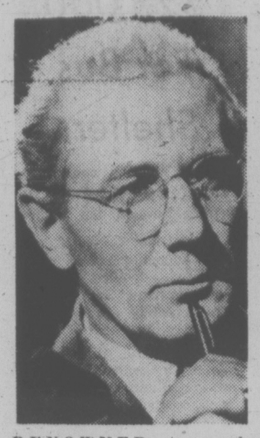
GOV'T TO RESTORE STUDENT EXCHANGE

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will restore a $1.5-million youth program this year for the sake of national unity, the Commons broadcasting committee was told Tuesday.

G. T. Rayner, an assistant deputy minister in the secretary of state's department, said the grants program will be re-established this summer.

The youth exchange, which enabled students to spend time in different parts of the country, was killed in last year's spending austerity campaign.

The committee was told the restored program will stress exchanges between English-and-French-speaking students although details of how the grants will be handed out have not been settled.



RENOWNED stage and screen actor, Sir Michael Redgrave, is coming to Victoria in April and with a company of four will give two special performances at the Royal Theatre.

The show is entitled Shakespeare's People and it has generated rave reviews wherever it has appeared on its North American tour.

It is being brought to Victoria by Bastion Theatre in conjunction with Vancouver impresario David H. Y. Lui. Dates are April 26 and 27.

Redgrave, who was knighted in the Queen's honor list of 1959 is head of the outstanding English theatrical family which includes daughters Vanessa and Lynn and son, Corin. One of Redgrave's many memorable and award-winning screen portrayals was the embittered teacher in Terence Rattigan's The Browning Version.

WESTERN STUDENTS MEET HERE

Student representatives from the four western provinces will discuss problems facing students at post secondary instutions during a conference here this week.

Representatives from 12 universities, 16 community colleges and two technical institutes will discuss housing, financial aid and career planning among other topics during the three-day Canadian Association of College and University Student Services (CAUCUSS) conference at the Royal Oak Inn.

The program is designed to address problems faced by students, and the large registration is an indication of the growing need for the exchange of ideas, said Ted Sawchuck, director of student and ancillary services at the University of Victoria.

49% Rate Hike Suggested For Saanich Water Hookup

The cost of water connections and sanitary sewer hookups in Saanich may go up more than 40 per cent.

Council's public works committee Tuesday recommended a 49 per cent increase — $270 to $325 — for one-inch water connections and a 46 per cent increase — $185 to $225 — for three-quarter-inch connections.

The levy for a four-inch storm drain connection will be increased 25 per cent from $200 to $250 if council endorses the recommendations.

A standard connection fee will also be made for all applications for building permits requiring a drain connection.

TV to Promote Volunteerism

The Victoria Volunteer Bureau is hoping to reap the benefits later this month when an American television show promoting volunteerism is beamed into an estimated 20,000 homes here.

Russ Flower, a probation officer and representative of the bureau, said it's hoped Victorians who see the show at 8 p.m. Sunday, March 27 on Seattle's Channel 7 will be interested enough to contact his organization and get involved in volunteer programs.

To encourage that response, he adds, the bureau has arranged to have a special call-in number flashed on city screens while the show is in progress.

"We've never tried anything of this scale before and have no idea what to expect," he said. "We really don't know how many people might phone in, it's just something we're trying to take advantage of."

Flowers says, however, that the bureau will have no problem finding a use for all those who come forward.

"There's always a need for volunteers," he said, explaining that the bureau represents some 140 different volunteer agencies in Greater Victoria.

"A lot of those agencies run solely on volunteers," he adds, "without them they just wouldn't exist."

Flower stressed that volunteers do not add to the unemployment problem, saying that, "they only fill the gaps . . . they don't do people out of jobs, they create jobs because they establish the need for particular kinds of roles and agencies and governments recognize that.

Trustees Undecided Over Mt. View School Future

Sundance school parents are angry but Camosun College is pleased with Greater Victoria school board for delaying a decision on the future of Mount View School.

Camosun president Grant Fisher said Tuesday the college is seeking a large facility like Mount View, and the delay will give trustees more time to examine the Camosun proposal.

Trustees Monday tabled a motion that Sundance, now at 2549 Quadra, next year move into the Mount View buildings on Carey Road. Camosun is now renting the Mount View Facilities.

Sundance needs better facilities for its successful experimental co-op teaching program, and after receiving a detailed report from Sundance parents, school board officials recommended they move to Mount View.

But Camosun is in the midst of an $11 million expansion program which includes creating a permanent third major campus in addition to Lansdowne and Interurban.

Because of cost restrictions, Camosun must use an existing facility, and "obviously Mount View is the one that exists," Fisher said. "So that puts us in the position of competing with Sundance."

At the meeting, Trustee Peter Bunn said a Sundance take-over of the Mount View campus would be gross under-utilization of the facilities.

Several Sundance parents who were at the meeting were angry because the report they had spend hours working on was dismissed in minutes by trustees.

A motion to table, however, is not debatable, and once passed, no further discussion is allowed.

Sundance principal Donna Woolliams said Mount View has more space than Sundance needs at the present time, but she could foresee the school expanding over the years.

Deficit Reduced

OTTAWA (CP) — The balance of international payments showed a $4.329-billion deficit in 1976, about $600 million less than figures for 1975, Statistics Canada said Tuesday. The federal agency said a surplus of $1.132 billion on merchandise trade, compared with a deficit in 1975, was the main factor in reducing the deficit.

Editor Sues Victorian

Tony Simnett, fired March 1 as managing editor of The Victorian, is suing the newspaper for breach of contract and seeking one year's salary in damages for wrongful dismissal.

Simnett's lawyer, George MacMinn, confirmed today that the B.C. Supreme Court action was initiated with the issuance of a writ Monday against Vancouver Island Publishing Company Ltd., owners and publishers of The Victorian.

The amount of damages claimed, $20,400, represents one year's salary, McMinn said.

In an interview today Simnett said he was fired March 1 but paid only up to March 4. "After two and a half years' service I obviously don't feel that was enough," he added.

Simnett said he had no written contract with the firm, but his lawyer noted: "A contract is a contract; some are in writing, others are not."

MacMinn said it's a popular misconception that no contract exists unless there is a written document.

There was no indication what attitude the newspaper's management would take with regard to the litigation.

UVic Seeks Blood Donors

The first day of a three-day blood campaign drew 243 donors to the University of Victoria's Student Union Building Tuesday.

It left the university a come-from-behind battle to meet the target of 1,000 donors by Thursday evening.

Clinic hours are 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today and Thursday.

$25,000 For Bus Shelters

Saanich is considering spending $25,000 for bus shelters through the municipality this year.

The council's public works committee decided Tuesday to recommend the item be considered by the budget committee.

The cost of an enclosed shelter, including aluminum framing, aluminum and glass panels, bench and garbage bin is $2,100.

Ald. Ian Cass suggested installing about 30, saying there is an urgent need for shelters in Saanich.

BUCKLE UP BELTS

In Ontario, the average fine was about $23.

Davis said an intensive public advertising campaign will be launched when the legislature approves the act. It is expected to pass without much opposition.

Davis said he had to face a "difficult time" from his own caucus and party to get the bill introduced.

The last Social Credit convention passed a motion opposing mandatory seatbelt legislation because it infringed on individual freedoms.

Davis said he regarded the opportunity to drive as a privilege, not a right.

The seatbelt law should be compared with laws which make drivers stay on the right hand side of the road, the minister said.

"And it certainly protects the rights of others."

A spokesman for the RCMP in Victoria said the law would apply in British Columbia for anyone in the province, whether a resident or a tourist, but the police would exercise discretion in enforcing it.

For example, he said, the B.C. law would oblige British Columbians to have seatbelts in any car newer than a 1963 model, but such a law might not exist in other provinces or neighboring states.

Technically, he said, the B.C. law would apply to drivers from other provinces or the United States but it's highly doubtful the police would enforce it under the circumstances.

Doctors in the province, who have been pressing for a mandatory seat belt law for years, were quick to hail introduction of the bill.

Dr. William Jory, president of the B.C. Medical Association, sent a telegram of congratulation to Premier Bennett, saying it is "a significant step forward in the war against highway deaths and injuries and will stand as an important achievement of your government."

'Great Thrill' Felt With Handicapped

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

One of the programs on which she works with fellow employees David Worthy and Peter Menzies, as well as volunteers Marlene Andrews and Gary Townsend, involves taking 20 mentally retarded adults from the Langwood workshop on the type of excursions most of us take for granted.

Most of the time members of the group are restricted to the workshop or life in Glendale hospital, home or a group home.

But every second Wednesday the group gets an immersion into the life of the community at large.

"They walked into a dark room. There was this errie music and celestial scene that produced a lot of fear. A lot of them had never been to a show before," Baker recalled. "But in a couple of minutes everything was fine. Being able to show something to someone for the first time is a kind of a great thrill."

As Worthy puts it, "They intimidate me. They swim away like crazy."

Baker is convinced the programs to bring the handicapped face to face with the rest of society are slowly changing the attiude of the public.

"I can really see a lot of changes in the public," she said. "It takes just a little patience for people to realize we all feel the same inside. We all have the desire for social and physical recreation."

Before the centre began operating, Baker said it was unusual to see people in wheelchairs shopping in department stores.

Now it's become part of their life for those who use the centre's facilities.

The community presence of the handicapped, Baker says, will gradually change the public attitude toward them, allowing the handicapped to be considered and consulted in the events of everyday living.

"The whole point is to make the public aware. I think that's coming. That's what we're working toward. When that comes we won't have to exist."

The Times, in co-operation with CJVI, is sponsoring a campaign to raise operating funds for the society.

Government grants, which have provided most of the funding are running out, and the work done by Baker and other workers is in jeopardy.

Cracks Show In Peninsula Water Link

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

The veneer of co-operation between Saanich Peninsula municipalities over water supply showed a few patches Tuesday as their new water commission struggled with a variety of problems.

Out of 2½ hours of talk came the impression that the water supply system for Central Saanich, Sidney and North Saanich may be merged on paper but on the ground each continues to run its own show.

Sidney is suspicious that Central Saanich is overcharging for water it is pumping from Elk Lake. And given cheaper water rates in Central Saanich, commission members are wondering what that municipality is going to do to encourage water conservation this summer when a shortage is anticipated.

The commission, with three regional board members on it and representation from all peninsula councils and water boards, came into being at the first of the year to deal with the chronic summer water shortage and past fragmented water system.

Within a couple of years it will have produced a long-term solution by building a major water line up the peninsula. That line will bring water from the Sooke watershed, the same source which supplies the core municipalities through the Greater Victoria Water District system.

Meanwhile, there are merging pains and one of them is that the new commission is responsible solely for bulk water supply. Distribution is the responsibility of each of the three municipalities.

The commisison's operating budget of $188,225 for this year has yet to be cleared through the regional board and by the provincial government and doesn't provide for taking over key pumping operations, members were told.

Even so, members voted to take over the Elk Lake pumping station operated by Central Saanich as soon as a temporary line has been installed later this spring, linking it with the GVWD system which has reached the south end of Beaver-Elk Lake.

That line will be laid on the surface and will be a 12-inch platic pipe following the old Victoria and Sidney Railway right-of-way up the west side of the lakes.

It will cost about $125,090, but aboout half of that can be recovered when it is taken up and sold in a couple of years.

In the end, regional co-operation was reaffirmed when regional directors, Jerry Tregaskis, George Westwood and Dave Hill, for Sidney, North Saanich and Central Saanich, won commission support for a common newsletter to be sent to all residents preaching water conservation this summer.

Scaling of water rates to encourage it will be studied by individual municipalities.

Masked Men Face Charges

Saanich police have laid a conspiracy charge after the arrest Tuesday of two masked men and the seizure of a sawed-off shotgun.

Police today refused to give details on how they were apprehended.

The two men were surprised by four officers who found them sitting in a car parked near Coppens Jewellery Ltd. in the Shelbourne Plaza.

Police said the men, who face a series of charges, had the hoods of their jackets over their heads and were wearing silk stocking masks.

The two were taken into custody without struggle.

Inspector Robin Stewart said the gun, stockings and some gloves were seized.

Police have charged the pair with possession of a prohibited weapon and conspiracy to commit armed robbery.

A third charge, possession of a weapon for the purpose of committing an indictable offence, is pending, Stewart added.

The two possession charges carry a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment while the conspiracy charge carries a maximum penalty of life.

Q. I change my car's crankcase oil myself, but I have encountered a disposal problem for the used oil. Municipal and the regional recycling garbage trucks won't take it depot has no facilities for oil recovery. What can I do with it? G.S.

A. You have a problem, along with a growing number of other motorists who see the advantages of do-it-yourself service. There is one place on the lower Island where your old oil is welcome — Star Oil Refining, 1651 Island Highway which re-refines hundreds of thousands of gallons of oil a year. It is open 7 a.m. - 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Closed containers of used oil may be left on weekends. And energy-saving re-refined oil may be purchased in bulk quantities with all grit, carbon, acids, metal particles, detergents, additives and multigrade lubricants removed by Star's separation process.

Gov't 'Exploits' Jobless Ranks

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Victoria Labor Council president John Schibli today accused the federal government of being callously indifferent to the country's unemployment problem in order to create a climate favoring withdrawal of Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

Schibli predicted the government will do nothing to alleviate the nation's chronic unemployment until after AIB guidelines have been lifted, because in a period of high unemployment, unions are more likely to settle for less.

"In times of severe unemployment unions are intimidated into accepting lesser agreements," he said. "In the construction industry, for example, people have been on unemployment for a long time and we're obviously going to find it difficult to convince people that they should go out on strike."

SCHIBLI
. . . tough time ahead

Schibli said that with controls about to be lifted, "I can easily see that the government is not going to be too damn anxious to offer any major programs to alleviate massive unemployment."

He said in the current climate, workers look at the number of unemployed and feel lucky to have a job, any job, and any kind of a paycheque.

"There's no doubt the government's callously exploiting the present situation," he said. "It's a typical management attitude."

Responding to statements made early this week by AIB vice president June Menzies, urging companies to be prepared to endure long strikes after the guidelines have been removed, Schibli said: "Really what she's saying is that the government must continue this severe unemployment during the de-control period — in other words, keep the people hungry and they won't be screaming for increases."

Menzies said Monday in Victoria that companies have been leaning on the AIB as an excuse for not giving big wage settlements, but after the guidelines are gone they'll have to stand on their own.

She urged companies not to give in, "otherwise all that has been gained during the three years will be lost."

Schibli said he is not surprised by the position the government has taken because, "of course we're used to that — we don't expect a helluva lot from them, except six months before an election, and by then it's too bloody late."

Schibli predicted the de-control period will be a tough time for the trade union movement right across the country.

"There's already a lot of concern about future confrontations," he said. "It's the membership that decides whether to strike or not, and right now people are worried about working."

The government is committed to end the controls program next year and is now actively debating a schedule for the phase-out.

Sooke Volunteers on the March

Unique is the word for it.

Because of a community spirit that is unique in its strength, the people of Sooke will soon have a museum in a unique building. And the whole thing is going to make people in many other rural areas rather envious.

For nostalgia is in vogue right now. The good old days, back when . . . and all that. And most country districts would dearly love to have a building that could house the relics (artifacts not the oldtimers, that is!) of bygone days so today's children might learn and understand what it took to make a community as it is now.

But hard work — and it takes a lot of it to pull off such a project — is not quite so much in vogue.

Bill (Tuck) Vowles, president of the Sooke Lions Club, knows his area is fortunate.

"We notice that with other Lions Clubs they often have to hire people to get a job done," Tuck explains. "But we can always get volunteer help here."

It was the Lions Club, in fact, back in 1974 under then-president John Wilson, that got the museum project started. The Lions called a meeting of all local groups and the Sooke Region Historical Society was born.

And then the community started moving.

Today, if you drive out from Victoria, just over the bridge on the corner of the road you go down each summer to All Sooke Day, you'll find a splendid building nearing completion. Fully in keeping with the logging history of the area, it is constructed with logs in the stockade fashion and boasts a heavy shake roof.

The logs — 6,000 feet of them worth more than $14,000 — were donated by logging companies. And 90 per cent of all the timber used for finishing work in the 30- by 50-foot, two-storey building was given to the society by local mills.

"The companies have been really good but so have the people," says Historical Society archivist Elida Peers.

Something like 4,000 man-hours (sorry, person-hours) have gone into the building so far and most of that time has been donated by residents who have gone out to Lions' weekend work parties. As well, many people have given the society old tools and other interesting things they've had lying around their property. Jean Robinson, who is in charge of cataloguing artifacts, has 200 listed already. But there are countless other ways people have helped.

The catchy logging truck insignia for the society's stationery and scrap books was drawn by the Sooke fire chief Lorne Fisk and the printing was done free by a local firm. The museum building itself was designed by Lion Cliff Beange with modifications by foreman Peter Tymchuk.

"This is the way the whole thing has gone," says Elida Peers, "and if it hadn't, we wouldn't be anywhere."

"We got an awful lot of community involvement when we were peeling the logs," explains Tuck Vowles. "And that's tough work. But ironically, once we were successful in getting an LIP grant of $29,500 to help pay for the construction (the society has hired a few young workers), people sort of left us to it."

Still, the building, already creating quite an impression on passing motorists, will be ready for the tentative opening date of July 2. Three main model projects — oldtimer Bill Baker's replica of the kind of fish traps used on the coast from Becher Bay to Jordan River between 1904 and 1959, an Indian exhibit and a display of both early and contemporary logging — won't be in the museum by then.

max low

"It won't be a perfected museum at that stage," says Mrs. Peers. "We'll simply open and have some artifacts and a few souvenirs for the tourists to help pay for maintenance. It will be some years before we're good."

Funny enough, at first the building won't open as a museum — but as a dancehall!

"That's right," Mrs. Peers admits with a grin. "We're having a barbecue and dance here on June 11 as a fund-raising project. And that's when the Lions will officially turn the building over to the Historical Society."

Loud Blast Rocks Area

A loud explosion rocked the Shelbourne-Feltham area Tuesday night but Saanich police have been unable to determine the cause.

A Saanich police spokesman said there were several calls about the blast, first reported at 10:18 p.m.

Police checked a number of properties in the area but were unable to find anything.

Hebenton Part of Cougar Sale Deal

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Only the formality of signing remains, but it would appear that Victoria Cougars are about to fall into the hands of new owners.

Regardless of when the signing takes place, Pat Ginnell, the present owner-manager-coach of the Western Canada Hockey League team, will remain as coach for the rest of this season.

Lorne Williams, heading a Vancouver group that has been negotiating for purchase of the Cougars, was quoted Tuesday in Vancouver as saying a deal has almost been completed and the new owners would take control at the end of the season.

Williams met with Ginnell on Monday.

Ginnell admitted there "is some truth" to Williams' statement. Ginnell, who left Flin Flon Bombers to take over control of the Cougars in December, 1973, said "several matters" still must be resolved. He didn't go into details.

It has been learned, however, that most of the "matters" are of a minor nature. But for the signatures on the ownership papers, the sale is going through and the actual signing could take place within days.

Depending on the whims of Williams and-or Ginnell, the announcement may be delayed until the end of the season.

Two of the biggest problems involving transfership have been settled. Williams has insisted on buying a debt-free club. But, while the Cougars are running below last season's figures, that didn't appear a major problem for Ginnell.

Another problem involves Paul LaPointe, father of former Cougar defenceman Rick Lapointe, now playing with Philadelphia Flyers of the National League. LaPointe owns 17 per cent, and has steadfastly refused to sell his share to Ginnell.

The Williams' group, while willing to accept LaPointe as a shareholder, wants the "debt-free" request to include the minority stockholder. Settlement on that point, apparently, also has been reached.

Williams is so sure of purchasing the Cougars that he has already contacted his "first choice" to succeed Ginnell as coach:

Andy Hebenton.

A popular performer with the old professional Cougars, Hebenton now coaches Tulsa in the professional Central League. Hebenton, it is further learned, has indicated he would be happy to return to Victoria.

Williams and Hebenton both played minor and junior hockey together in Winnipeg.

Finally, there is one other indication that the sale is almost a certainty. Bob Briscoe, associated with the Cougars when they were owned by the Eric Bishop-headed syndicate, will return to Victoria.

Briscoe, who scouted and worked in the business office, is expected to return as Victoria's business manager. A former sportswriter who returned to his old profession with the Sun, Briscoe already has tendered his resignation to the Vancouver paper.

Briscoe also has resigned as B.C. scout for Lethbridge Broncos of the WCHL.

The one thing that can't be ascertained is Ginnell's direction. He has admitted he has "places to go" but no one, as yet, knows where that will be.

It has been rumored that Ginnell will return to Flin Flon. He also is considered a candidate for the manager-coach position with Calgary Centennials. Seattle and Edmonton, both without franchises, also have been reported in his WCHL plans.

There is always more than one way to look at a curling championship.

First, there is the logical favorite, the champion. Secondly, there is the young rink hitting everything in sight. Then there is the popular veteran, still without a title, but back for another try. And obviously there is the local choice.

The nominal pick is the RCMP Roy Gislason rink of Winnipeg. Gislason is a two-time champion, 1975 and 1976, as a skip. And he has another ex-champion as a skip, throwing third rocks. Neil Dickson, formerly of Victoria and "glad to be back", won the title in 1974.

Manitoba is unbeaten after four rounds and won a pair fairly handily Tuesday. Gislason topped Eric Coughey of Nova Scotia 10-5, on the afternoon draw and then took care of still winless Ontario, skipped by Bob Nicholson 8-5, in the evening.

The youth charge is handled by the Saskatoon city police rink skipped by 22-year-old Norm Gilbertson. He hates rocks anywhere if they're not his own and Tuesday ran up his third and fourth victories and also in convincing fashion.

Gilbertson downed Eric Bower of Prince Edward Island 10-3 in the afternoon and, although he got a tussle from Ken Ursuliak of Edmonton in the evening, he always had control in taking a tight 6-4 decision.

Saskatchewan and Manitoba are the only unbeaten rinks heading into today's fifth and sixth rounds.

Fast becoming favorite of the fans is veteran Sonny Hirtle of New Brunswick RCMP. This is Hirtle's fifth try in the finals and he's making a good run at the crown that so far has evaded him. And with next year's championship in Moncton, it would be great to take back a title.

Fast becomi favorite of the fans is veteran Sonny Hirtle of New Brunswick RCMP. This is Hirtle's fifth try in the finals and he's making a good run at the crown that so far has evaded him. And with next year's championship in Moncton, it would be great to take back a title.

And Hirtle still has a chance, although he lost his first game, Tuesday. Down 5-0 after three ends to Ursuliak, Hirtle came fighting back, making many fine clutch shots himself. He got a pair on the fourth, stole two on the fifth and was 6-6 coming home. But he couldn't bury his final stone and Ursuliak then came through with the game-winning shot.

He beat Ontario's Nicholson 9-6 in the afternoon and then came from behind a 4-3 deficit in the fourth to romp over Newfoundland 11-4 in the fourth round. George MacCharles of Newfoundland had nothing but trouble after his fine start and never got the chalk after the fourth end.

Hawkes and Hirtle are right behind Gislason and Gilbertson with 3-1 records and are tied with Ursuliak for third place. And if "names" mean anything try Ursuliak for size.

Ursuliak is the son of Wally Ursuliak who curled with Edmonton's Hec Gervais on his world championship rink in 1961. He also was with Gervais in 1962 and laterally has been in the curling equipment business.

And then there's Northern Ontario. Bill Dustin of Thunder Bay police department won one and lost one Tuesday but he's also in that jam-up behind the leaders at 3-1 and could cause the leaders' problems. Dustin's first win was over Quebec 9-5, and then came the heartbreaker loss to Nova Scotia.

In a knockout battle from start to finish, Coughey outlasted Dustin 4-3 but not before Dustin's final rock had come to rest. With Coughey lying two, and leading by two, Dustin, with a rock in the back of the house, went to for a tough double.

He made that part of the shot all right, but lost his own back-ring rock as well and that cost him a chance to play the extra end.

Monarchs Take Dull Show

By ERNIE FEDORUK

They drew one on Tuesday and coach Pat Ginnell figures Victoria Cougars are due for more surprises if his players continue to perform as they did in a 3-1 loss to Winnipeg Monarchs.

"It was almost as if they're waiting for the playoffs," was Ginnell's biting comment after the Western Canada Hockey League engagement at Memorial Arena. "If that's going to be their attitude, they may get a surprise.

While the Cougars are assured of a playoff position, Ginnell has been looking for the team to move out of fourth place in the Western Division. The possibility exists but Tuesday's unexpected setback hurt the chances.

Victoria has six games remaining, including three with Kamloops Chiefs, whom Cougars trail by four points. Kamloops has a game in hand.

The Cougars did not play well. Monarchs, on the other hand, provided an excellent lesson in skating, passing and checking.

Only goaltender Murray Bannerman and, on occasion, Archie Henderson tried to instill some spitit and effort into the Cougars' play. The others didn't get the message.

Victoria's passing was particularly pathetic. The usually-dependable Geordie Robertson and Curt Fraser (playing on a line with Henderson) performed as if they had not been introduced. Gregg Anderson, Paul Enquist and Gary Lupul also had problems. Ditto the defence, wihich invariably waited until the forwards were covered before moving the puck up the ice.

Steele played a prominent role in Winnipeg's victory. He made 32 stops and was most effective in the first two periods.

Steele also had help from goalposts. John Gordon, Henderson and Lupul all hit the pipes in the first period.

In addition, Bill Jobson, Brent Gogol, Robertson (twice), Enquist and Glen Cochrane failed to connect on other excellent scoring chances over the first two periods.

In Tuesday's only other game, Bill Derlago scored his 88th and 89th goals to move to within one of the league record established by Ron Chipperfield as Brandon Wheat Kings defeated Regina Pats 5-2.

The win also assured Brandon of finishing with the most points in the over-all standings.

Wings Fire Delvecchio; Put Lindsay in GM Post

Times News Services

Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League fired general manager Alex Delvecchio today and replaced him with Ted Linsday, a former Red Wings' great.

The shakeup followed a 7-1 defeat at the hands of Vancouver Canucks in Vancouver, Tuesday night. It was the ninth straight winless game for the Wings who are mired deep in the cellar of the Norris Division of the NHL and have only 41 points, the lowest total in the entire league.

Lindsay inherits a tough job with the Wings who are wrapping up their seventh consecutive season out of the playoffs.

In other NHL games Tuesday night, Toronto Maple Leafs beat St. Louis Blues 4-1, Atlanta Flames defeated Pittsburgh Penguins 7-3 and Cleveland Barons beat Washington Capitals 5-1.

Wings coach Larry Wilson, following a 6-0 loss in Toronto on Saturday, blamed past management for the team's string of failures.

"It has become obvious as to what the problem is," said Wilson. "When you miss the playoffs for six or seven years, something has to be wrong and that, of course is our personnel. We just don't have the bodies to do the job and we haven't been getting them in the form of draft picks and in trades during that period of time."

After Tuesday's loss, Wilson said that Lindsay, knowing the type of guy he is, will get the players I want."

"We've got to build a good disciplined aggressive club, and I'll tell you right now that this is the last time Detroit will miss the playoffs for a long time."

After the Wings had skated to their 15th loss in their last 18 games, with Don Lever and Derek Sanderson leading the Canucks with a goal and two assists each, Wilson also had some harsh words for some players.

"There are five or six guys on this club that have no business in the NHL. They get up a goal and start running around the ice like chickens with their heads cut off as soon as the other team scores a goal."

At St. Louis, goalie Wayne Thomas stopped 35 shots to lead the Leafs while Lanny McDonald's 41st goal of the season provided the winning margin.

Eric Vail and Tom Lysiak each scored twice and Atlanta took a 5-0 lead over Pittsburgh in the first period.

Whitey Widing and Brent Meeke led Cleveland over Washington with a goal an an assist each.

"We didn't win the game tonight because we didn't put up any resistance," said Washington coach Tom McVie. "We played the team (Cleveland) five times this year and have lost five times."

Sixers End Squabbles And Clobber Cavaliers

By The Associated Press

Philadelphia '76ers may be back on the track.

Having aired their gripes and spoken their pieces, the '76ers settled down to what they do best Tuesday night and routed Cleveland Cavaliers 133-102.

"I think the stories cleared the air," said '76ers forward George McGinnis, referring to reports of discord on the team, which surfaced earlier this week. "If this can be a turning point for us, it couldn't come at a better time."

Indeed, if the 76ers are to go far in the National Basketball Association playoffs they will have to play better than they did the last month, when they had difficulty breaking even.

In other NBA games Tuesday, Denver Nuggets beat Los Angeles Lakers 107-95, Portland Trail Blazers defeated New Orleans Jazz 131-104, Kansas City Kings edged Washington Bullets 101-99, Chicago Bulls beat Boston Celtics 107-96 and San Antonio Spurs stopped New York Nets 118-108.

Julius Erving scored 29 points for Philadelphia and McGinnis had 23. The '76ers led 57-46 at intermission, started the second half with a 10-2 burst and outscored Cleveland 43-25 in the third quarter.

Baskets by Dan Issel, Jim Price and David Thompson within a span of 16 seconds midway through the third quarter helped Denver beat Los Angeles in a matchup of the two teams with the best records in the NBA.

Thompson led the Nuggets with 26 points while Bobby Jones had 15 points and 12 rebounds.

Center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had a police escort as a result of threats made against his life following the Hanafi Muslim terrorist activities last week in Washington, D.C., led the Lakers with 21 points.

Portland snapped a three-game losing streaak behind Lionel Hollins and Maurice Lucas, who scored 22 and 20 points, respectively, and handed New Orleans its eighth straight loss.

Kansas City won its sixth in a row and dealt Washington its fourth straight defeat as Sam Lacey scored two baskets and a pair of free throws in the final minute, climaxing a Kings' rally that erased a 10-point fourth-quarter deficit.

Sportsmen, Fed. Fisheries Should Abandon Old Fight

This little comment has been hanging fire for too long . . . So here goes . . . It seems to this writer some members of both local and provincial conservation organizations have become a little too fanatic in their blind opposition to federal fisheries . . . By the same token, it's quite apparent that some fisheries personnel have become equally contentious with sports fishermen . . . Offhand, I'd say this attitude is self-defeating on both sides . . . Gentlemen, let's get down to the task at hand and bury old grievances . . . Endlessly fighting old battles isn't leaving much time to concern ourselves with rebuilding the salmonid resources of this province . . . And isn't that what it's really all about?

Hunters who received a game harvest questionaire should take time out to fill them in and return them promptly . . . Good response rates, even if you didn't actually hunt in 1976, are an essential part of effective wildlife mnagement . . . Last year, about 76 per cent of the hunters contacted took time to respond. The year before, only 23 per cent responded . . . Let's keep the trend rising.

Bangor, Maine, with roughly half the population of Victoria, is using a composting system developed by the Agricultural Research Statjon in Beltsville, Md., to get rid of its sewage sludge . . . This process turns the sludge into a fertilizer or soil conditioner by drying it and mixing the residue with wood chips . . . Guess what we have an abundance of right now on Vancouver Island . . . Victoria is going to have to treat its sewage eventually, so why not start right now before the cost escalates even further . . . Building a similar composting plant in Victoria will at least recover some (if not all) of the costs of constructing the facility through sale of the fertilizer . . . One of the arguments in favor of straight ocean dumping was that Victoria's sewage contains relatively little in the way of industrial effluent . . . This would also make the composting facility an easier proposition.

The band winds up its announcement by saying: ". . . until we can arrange a meeting and come up with a solution which will accommodate our band needs, conserve the stock in the river, preserve our land for our future generations and satisfy the needs of the sports fishermen the Big Qualicum River within the boundary of the Qualicum Indian Reserve will remain closed."

Past Stars Scoff at Modern Ball

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Major-league baseball is stretching itself too thin, threatening to price itself out of business and existing on medioere talent. That's the consensus of a score of the game's Hall of Fame members.

"There are too many .200 hitters swinging for the fences — out and slash," said Bill Terry, former first baseman and manager of New York Giants and the last National Leaguer to bat over .400.

"When I played, if you were an outfielder and couldn't hit .300, John McGraw wouldn't give you a uniform," Terry, now a successful automobile dealer in Jacksonville, Fla., said of the legendary manager.

"They are giving everything to the batter these days," said Satchel Paige, the old Negro League star who broke into the majors at a late age and is still pitching batting practice after 50 years on the mound.

"They are narrowing home plate, flattening out the mound and giving the batter every edge. They ought to be ashamed. If you are a born hitter, you ought to be able to hit the ball."

Terry and Paige were just two of the personalities honored on the weekend at the dedication of the refurbished Al Lang Stadium, long a spring training site. St. Louis Cardinals and New York Mets, who train here, played the inaugural game.

The baseball heroes of the past who were present ranged from George "Highpockets" Kelly, a National Leaguer before the First World War, to Ralph Kiner, the Pittsburgh Pirates's home-run slugger and one of the more recent Hall of Fame inductees.

Terry scoffed at the designated hitter idea, now practised in the American League and got strong support from James "Cool Papa" Bell, a Negro Leaguer who has been rated the fastest man who ever ran the basepaths.

"How could you know whether a pitcher could hit the ball or not unless you give him a chance?" said Cool Papa, of whom it's been said he was so fast he could switch off the light and get in bed before it got dark.

"Babe Ruth was a pitcher So was Stan Musial. There were a lot of other pitchers who became hitters."

Most of the Hall of Famers criticized the expanding game as being too greedy and said the sport was probably alienating the fans.

"What bothers me most," said former New York Yankees' slugger Mickey Mantle, who showed up with his old running mate, Whitey Ford, "is the beating that the fans have to take.

"My father was a zinc miner and if he tried to take five kids to a game today it would cost him $50. He couldn't afford it. If we're not carefull a lot fans will not be able to afford it."

Monte Irvin, the old Giant, said he was not worried so much about the availability of talent.

"I think that is healthy. I am worried about the threat of escalating salaries. I don't know how long clubs can take that expense."

Musial, now an executive in the Cardinals' organization, said that one of the game's dangers is the little regard players now have for contracts.

"They think nothing of signing a contract and then asking for renogotiations," he said. "When I played, our word was our bond."

"Those option clauses and jumping from one team to another — it's very bad for baseball," he said.

Joe Cronin, a standout player, manager and later president of the American League, said he felt the game over-all was very healthy — the talent good and plentiful enough — but that outlandish salaries presented a threat to the game.

Highpockets Kelly said he regretted the deterioration of talent.

"In the old days it was like going to school," he added. "You moved up from 'D' to 'C' into the higher minors and then into the majors. You came out a finished major league player. Now baseball has expanded so much and talent is so thin that players are taken right off the college campus and into the major leagues with less than one year's experience."

Nanaimo, Spectrum Face Tough Openers

Nanaimo Islanders and Spectrum have drawn a little tougher opposition than Island-champion Oak Bay Bays as play opens today in the B.C. high school boys' basketball championships at Vancouver's Pacific Coliseum.

Islanders, ranked ninth in B.C., face third-seeded Kelowna Owls at 8:30 tonight while Spectrum, ranked 10th, is set to open against fifth-ranked Princess Margaret Lions of Surrey at 5:30.

Bays, rated No. 1 in B.C., were to play unranked Burnaby North Vikings at noon.

Bays won the crown in 1965 and 1968 under Gary Taylor and in 1973 and 1974 under Horwood. Only Vancouver College Fighting Irish have taken five titles — 1946 (the inaugural tourney), 1949, 1957, 1960 and 1967.

Ken Kirzinger, the six-foot-six Oak Bay centre, has been hot and cold all season but hit his peak during the Island final, controlling the boards and scoring 29 points as Bays thumped Spectrum, 88-41.

Islanders, coached by John Leverings, started the season in hot form but fell into an inconsistant pattern toward the latter part of the season and performed poorly in the Island tourney.

Spectrum also hit its high point during the Island tournament but their star guard, Grant Clark, injured an ankle in practice last week and may not be up to par.

The single-loss elimination tourney continues through to the final on Saturday.

MILLIONAIRE'S SON NOW CONTROLS '49ers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco 49ers have been sold to Edward DeBartolo Jr. of Youngstown, Ohio, subject to approval of National Football League owners at their March 28 meeting in Phoenix.

Lou Spadia, president of the 49ers, said Tuesday that an agreement had been reached in principle for the sale that was expected to make DeBartolo, 30, the NFL's youngest owner.

The sale price was not announced, but has been estimated at $16.5 million for more than 80 per cent of outstanding shares. The deal was financed by DeBartolo's father, a millionaire Youngstown contractor and developer and owner of Thistledown race track near Cleveland.

Joe Thomas, former general manager of Minnesota Vikings, Miami Dolphins and Baltimore Colts, was expected to be named general manager. The DeBartolos sought to buy the Tampa Bay franchise in 1975, and in 1974 they made a bid for Cleveland Indians' American League baseball franchise.

'Caps Import Stars

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League announced Tuesday it has signed two English soccer players for the coming season.

Goalkeeper Graham Moseley, 23, will join Whitecaps on loan from the English first division team Derby County. Mosely has played on the England youth international team as well as the England under-23 international team.

English first divison team Arsenal has agreed to loan Peter Simpson, 32, a defender who has played 400 league games with Arsenal. Simpson was a member of the Arsenal team that won the football league championship and the FA Cup championship in 1970-1971.

CENT PLAYER SUSPENDED

CALGARY (CP — Grant Morin of Calgary Centennials has been suspended for four games by Ed Chynoweth, Western Canada Hockey League President.

The suspension was ordered after Morin, who leads all WCHL players in penalties with 394 minutes, received a game misconduct for his part in an altercation with a Medicine Hat Tigers' player Sunday in a game here.

E. Germany Holds Lead

TOKYO (Reuter) — East Germany remained the only unbeaten team in the International Ice Hockey Federation group B championships Tuesday, handing Poland its first loss by a 7-1 score.

The victory was the fourth in a row for the East Germans, while Poland fell to third place in the nine-nation competition with a 3-1 record.

In other games, Japan moved into second place with a 3-0-1 record by coming from behind to beat Switzerland 3-2 and the Netherlands earned its first point in a 5-5 tie with Yugoslavia.

Smart on Top

WINNIPEG (CP) — British Columbia remained undefeated Tuesday night after six rounds of the Canadian junior men's curling championship.

Gary Smart's North Vancouver foursome defeated Quebec 7-4 when skip Alain Guy of Trois Rivieres missed a raise-takeout in the 10th end in an attempt to count two to tie the score.

B.C. defeated Northern Ontario 7-6 in the fifth round when Smart counted two on the final end after skip Greg Rietze of Capreol missed both his shots.

Alberta and Prince Edward Island remained one game back of B.C. Paul Gowsell of Calgary bombed Saskatchewan 10-1 in five ends and Peter Jenkins of Charlottetown made a clutch takeout in an extra end to defeat Manitoba 5-4.

ALBERTA GIRLS LEAD

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — The Alberta entry in the Canadian girl's curling championships was the only undefeated rink after rounds five, six and seven were completed Tuesday.

Alberta started the day with an 11-4 win over Manitoba, which had also been undefeated to that point.

Manitoba lost two subsequent games — 8-4 to Quebec and 9-7 to Ontario — and finished the day in fifth place with a 4-3 win-loss record.

Ontario moved into second place with three wins Tuesday for a 5-1 record.

GOOD DEPTH, EXPERIENCE GIVES HOME A FOUNDATION

Victoria Home Lumber, stacked with experience and virtually the same lineup that carried the team to victory last year, departed today for Saskatoon to defend the Canadian senior "A" women's basketball championship.

Play starts Thursday with eight teams separated into two sections of four each. The top two teams advance from the qualifying, round-robin eliminations into the championship semi-finals.

Home Lumber is bracked into one division with Quebec, Nova Scotia and Alberta. Manitoba, Ontario, Saskatchewan and New Brunswick form the second division.

The team, coached by Jack Lusk, includes regulars Diana Morris, Rose Jossul, Donna Blackstock, Marilyn Benn, Angie Dobie, Lorraine Tutte, Mary Coutts, Dee Freethy and Lorna McHattie.

In addition, Home Lumber has recruited guard Wendy Grant and forward Gail Klaver from the mainland. Both played with Victoria in last year's nationals.

Garrett Sparks Bulls; Hedberg Gets No. 61

By The Canadian Press

Pat Kelly is bullish on John Garrett.

"You'll never see a better performance than Garrett gave us tonight," Kelly raved after Birmingham's 4-2 triumph over Cincinnati Stingers in which Garrett stopped 46 of 48 shots. "It's the best goaltending I've ever seen in my life. He gave us two points."

Moaning Marv's Boys Topped No-Yards List

TORONTO (CP) — Remember how Marv Levy, coach of Montreal Alouettes, complained when other Canadian Football League teams decided it was better to take a penalty than give Johnny Rodgers the freedom to run back punts?

Well, guess which team received the most penalties for failing to obey the rule giving punt returners a five-yard restraining zone. Montreal Alouettes.

Penalty figures compiled by Hap Shouldice, director of officiating, for the 1976 season show the Als led the league with 27 no-yards infractions. The Grey Cup champion Ottawa Rough Riders were second with 22 while Hamilton Tiger-Cats recorded the fewest infractions—eight.

Although Rodgers has departed for the National Football League, his elusiveness on punt returns made it worth while taking a 10-yard penalty instead of risking a long runback, especially after blocking was introduced two seasons ago.

But the practice seemed to be on the verge of becoming a habit for most of the nine clubs—a 135-per-cent increase in 1975 and 16 per cent in 1976— and that prompted a change in the rules. This season there will be a 15-yard penalty for no yards plus an additional 15 or 25 yards if the punt-returner is hit before he touches the ball.

Shouldice's statistics showed a record 1,338 penalties called during the season. While 19 per cent—253—were associated with rough play, including clipping, face-masking, piling on and contacting the kicker, there were only five for fighting. The fighting penalties call for automatic expulsion and a fine.

Ottawa, with a total of 167 penalties, and Montreal with 164 were 1-2 in the list of most penalized teams, Calgary Stampeders had 157, Edmonton Eskimos 153, Toronto Argonauts 150, Winnipeg Blue Bombers 147, Saskatchewan Roughriders 145, British Columbia Lions 138 and Hamilton 117.

Jeff Turcotte of Ottawa was the most penalized player with 18, half of them for no-yards. Team-mate Larry Cameron, the 1975 penalty champ, tied for second in 1976 with 13, the same as Bill Frank of Winnipeg, Granville Liggins of Toronto and Wayne Smith of B.C.

McVie May Reject Team Canada Post

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Washington Capital coach Tom McVie has acknowledged that he has been offered the job of leading Team Canada in the world ice hockey championships in Vienna next month, but says he is leaning toward rejection.

McVie told The Washington Post that he does not feel the players to be chosen from nonplayoff teams and first-round losers in the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association would match his high standards of motivation.

"I was ready to leave the team right away and get to it," he said. "But the more I think about it, the less I want it. I'm going to try and say no."

The six NHL teams and three WHA teams that do not qualify for playoff action will provide the team nucleus.

RANDALL LIFTS ENGLAND

MELBOURNE (Reuter) — An unbeaten score of 87 by Derek Randall in his first test against Australia opened the possibility today of England winning the centenary cricket test after the fourth day.

Needing 463 for victory, England was 191 for two at the close with the other not-out batsman, Dennis Amiss, on 34. Australia declared its second innings at 417 for nine with Rod Marsh 100 not out.

The Nottinghamshire player was in control from the moment he came to the wicket in the first over after lunch.

Mortel Comes to Western With That Winning Edge

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

If Tony Mortel has the success as a speedway manager he enjoyed as a racing driver, it should be a good summer for the stock and open-wheel cars.

Mortel replaces Reg Midgley as manager at Western Speedway this year although Midgley, who ran the track for 11 seasons, will keep a hand in by promoting major stock car events like the Canada 200 in September and the International Drivers Challenge series and NASCAR Western Grand National race in July.

Mortel is no stranger to motorsport. He raced stock cars at Western for two years in the mid-1960s, then drove sprint cars for four years in western Canada and the U.S.

"I quit my job for two years to run in the CAMRA (Canadian American Modified Racing Association series and did very well," Mortel recalled. "I won maybe 15 features. My partner (Blake Sprague of Victoria) and I ended up after two years with my car, trailer and all the equipment paid for and about $10,000 left over.

"That was when there was good money in racing," he added reflectively. "The money is still there, but the cars and equipment are so much more expensive now. Still, racing has been good to me."

Mortel is a former president of CAMRA, which governs modified and sprint car racing in B.C., Alberta, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Utah. He has also promoted sprint car events at Western.

He was instrumental in bringing CAMRA together with another modified car group, the Washington Racing Association, in putting on joint programs to bring more cars to Victoria.

Stock car promotion is relatively new to Mortel and he's relying heavily on president Danny Wade of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association for help.

"The co-operation from VITRA has been great," Mortel said.

He inherits a new set-up for stock-car racing this year, thanks to work of VITRA and Midgley. Western Speedway joins Grandview Bowl in Nanaimo and Oyster River Speedway near Campbell River to form a Vancouver Island circuit. Both up-Island tracks are quarter-mile paved ovals compared with Western's four-tenth mile circuit.

There was no racing at Grandview Bowl for three years until last fall when a stock car show was promoted there.

Oyster River, which began as a dirt oval a number of years ago, has been running regularly and Mortel hopes the track will produce up to 40 hobby stock drivers.

Super stocks and the hobby class will be involved in Island racing, but the tentative schedule has both classes appearing on the same card only twice at Western.

Western Speedway will have eight super stock dates while Nanaimo and Oyster River have four each. There will be six nights of hobby stock racing at Western and four at each of the other tracks.

There also will be a new super-stock competition involving Western and Langley Speedway on the mainland. The Carling O'Keefe B.C. Championship series, with two stops at each track, offers a total of $18,500 in prize money, including a $2,500 points fund.

The schedule, still to be finalized, calls for the series to start May 28 at Western and continue May 29, at Langley, July 30 at Western and July 31 at Langley. Gordie Hemrick has taken over as Langley manager.

"The hope is to eventually expand to other tracks in B.C.," Mortel said, "but the idea right now is to offer the fans a variety of drivers without the competitors having to pay a lot in travel costs."

The NASCAR Western Grand National, which made its inaugural appearance at Western Speedway last summer, is scheduled again on July 12 and the Carling Canada 200 goes Sept. 10. The IDC for super-stocks takes place at Western, July 12 and 14.

The CAMRA-WRA sprint cars make three stops at Western—June 4 for the Daffodil Cup, July 2 for the Strawberry Cup and a two-day show making up the Billy Foster Memorial race Sept. 17 and 18. That one also serves as CAMRA-WRA's final series championship.

Western also will be the scene of a demolition derby July 16 involving cars and drivers from the Pacific northwest in Autralian pursuit racing. Drivers in this type of competition must bump the car ahead before they can pass.

INDOOR LEAGUE PLANNED

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The North American Soccer League plans to add an indoor season and become a year-round sport in the United States.

Club owners have voted tentative agreement for a 12-game indoor schedule to begin in November.

The plan, for six home and six away games, is expected to be completed at a meeting May 1, probably in New York.

Fourteen of the 19 NASL clubs have expressed interest in playing. The other teams, New York, Seattle, Portland, St. Louis and Chicago, apparently do not feel at this time the added erpense and marketing promotion is feasible.

"There is no definite vote to go ahead with the league, but it is 99 per cent sure," said commissioner Phil Woosnam at the close of a two-day meeting of owners and general managers of the 19 teams.

Tentative plans call for a 12-player roster and playoffs in February.

Intermediate Event

A field of 36 including city amateur champion Brian Gandy and 1976 Island Open runner-up Grant Milliken will tee off in the first round of the city intermediate men's golf championship Saturday at Cedar Hill.

A new champion will be decided since last year's titleholder, Cec Ferguson, has turned professional.

Second round will take place Sunday at Uplands, starting at 10 a.m. and featuring the leaders playing together.

9:37 — Mike Mousseau, Don Gowan, Grant Milliken.
10:00 — Dave Donaldson, Dave Anderson, Dan McDonald.
10:30 — Kane Straith, Daryl Burnett, Bill Goodwin.
10:37 — Thab Newman, Jay Barlow, Max Miller.
10:52 — Mike Cook, Perry Carrigan, Max McGibbon.

HOCKEY CLINIC

National coach Ann McKenna will instruct a local level coaching certification course for the B.C. Women's Field Hockey Association next week at Spectrum Community School.

The course is divided into two parts and runs from 6:30 to 10 p.m. Tuesday and 6 to 9:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Cost of the course is $8 for Canadian Women's Field Hockey Association members and $10 for non-members. Further information may be obtained by telephoning Jenny John at 383-6626 or 479-8261.

Ex-Guard Guilty of Drug Charge

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former guard at the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre (Oakalla) was convicted Tuesday in county court of possessing 8½ pounds of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

William Louis Reisig, 35, who has been free on bail of $125,000, was advised by county court Judge W. A. McClellan that he now is in custody.

The drug arrived in Canada in a shipment of six-volt batteries from Hong Kong in March, 1975.

The court now is proceeding with conspiracy charges against Reisig and Clifford Fook Hing Jung, 44. They are charged with conspiring to import the narcotic into Canada and conspiring to traffic in the drug.

Reisig admitted when he took the stand in his own defence that he had ordered the batteries but denied any knowledge of the heroin, with an estimated street value of $10 million, that they contained.

He said he had ordered them from a man named Sun Cheang, whose address he no longer had, and arranged for the distribution through a man named Jimmy, whose last name or address he did not know.

Judge McClellan said he rejected Reisig's statements as unworthy of belief and said the story was made up to cover up an illicit transaction.

He added that Reisig was knowingly acting as a recipient to claim a shipment of heroin and found him guilty of possession. When the defence made no submissions on the question of possession for the purpose of trafficking, he also found him guilty on that charge.

Customs men became suspicious of the shipment when the batteries produced no spark, and called RCMP who bugged the container which was followed by police to Reisig's home.

PHONE HEARINGS SET

VANCOUVER (CP) — Public Hearings into a rate increase application by B.C. Telephone Co. begin next Tuesday in Vancouver and nearly 1,300 briefs, interventions and submissions are expected to be presented to the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission.

B.C. Tel has applied to the CRTC for permission to increase rates by 15 per cent on local services and 10 per cent on long distance.

At a pre-hearing conference Tuesday, hearing chairman Christopher Johnston said the main series of public hearings is expected to last at least two weeks.

He also announced that regional hearings will be held in Delta on March 25, in Victoria, March 28 and in Nanaimo on March 30.

Company counsel Peter Butler said Tuesday that B.C. Tel has received nearly 500 questions relating to its rate increase application.

Suite Charges Halted

RICHMOND (CP) — Aldermen overrode objections of Mayor Gil Blair and this week reaffirmed their decision to temporarily stop prosecuting illegal suite violations.

Blair had invoked a section of the Municipal Act which allows mayors to order councils to reconsider past decisions, and ordered council to reconsider the decision it took at a closed meeting two weeks ago to halt prosecutions for illegal suites and to take a public survey of residents' attitudes to illegal suites.

Council had become concerned that their procedures regarding illegal suites — which had action on the suites being taken only as the result of citizen complaints — were resulting in racially discriminatory use of the bylaw. Of 215 complaints and subsequent investigations into illegal suites in recent months, 70 to 90 per cent were against East Indian tenants, Ald. Harold Steves said Monday.

Four aldermen said they considered the earlier decision would give council time to assess public opinion on the illegal suites issue and to formulate a more equitable policy for the municipality to take. At the same time, they agreed, it would stop the inequitable application of the current bylaw.

BEAUTY SHOWS COME BEFORE ART WORKS

SURREY (CP) — Municipal council has decided that beauty pageants are more deserving than a piece of wooden sculpture when the tab is $3,500.

"Grants are not for hunks of wood ... no matter who carves it up," Ald. Fred Beale argued Monday before council rejected a Surrey Arts Council Society request that it buy a Dudley Carter Scultpure for $3,500.

Ald. Garry Watkins had said that the carving should be "as deserving as the $3,500 we have set aside for a beauty pageant."

College Plan For Vernon Approved

VERNON (CP) — Plans for a 342-student college facility here have cleared a major hurdle and funds may be allocated for the project before the end of the year.

"The ministry of education has made a commitment — a powerful commitment — to a college facility in Vernon," George Gowiland, planning co-ordinator for Okanagan Regional College, said Tuesday.

Approval has been given to the student space allotment for 342 students and Gowiland described the development as "a major step" toward a college facility in Vernon.

"The whole project is gradually coming along — I wouldn't be surprised to see some funding before the end of the year," said Marvin Kirton, college council chairman.

Kirton said the government has indicated no more money will be going to the Kelowna campus beyond the $12.4 million already budgeted until Vernon has a college facility.

Costly Treatment

OTTAWA (CP) — Health care for the treatmente of alcoholism and alcohol related diseases costs Canadian taxpayers about $2 billion annually and about $500 million for diseases attributed to smoking, Health Minister Marc Lalonde told the Commons.

Can't Recall Fatal Crash: Driver

The driver of a car involved in a fatal accident Feb. 10 has testified he can't recall anything about the accident.

Dennis Sharpe, 17, of Duncan told a six-man coroner's jury he only remembers driving past Tillicum on the Trans-Canada Highway with two companions.

Six miles down the highway Sharpe's car collided with a taxi crossing Millstream. Taxi driver Gregory William McLean, 19, of 211 Mary, and his passenger, Gustav Niclaus Becker, 58, of 2110 Millstream, died in the crash.

Sharpe's companions, Ronald Boxem, 18, of Mill Bay and Charles Harrison, 18, of Cowichan Station testified they had spent the evening at the Bacchanalia Cabaret, 905 Esquimalt.

Sharpe picked them up shortly after 1 a.m., they said, and they recalled leaving the cabaret but nothing about the drive home. The next thing they remembered was waking up in hospital.

Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre adjourned the inquest to March 30 at the request of RCMP who intend to present an expert witness to show where in the intersection the collision took place.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A former government employee with the Employment Program Branch's work activities project was charged Tuesday in Victoria provincial court with 16 counts of fraud, 14 counts of theft and one count of breach of trust.

John Peter Alexander Fraser, 32, was charged in connection with his involvement with the project between May 1, 1975, and March 31, 1976, at Lake Cowichan.

He was remanded until next Monday when defence lawyer Bruce McConnan is expected to make an election for Fraser on the 31 counts, which are contained in two separate charges.

Ten of the theft charges are for amounts over $200 while the remaining four are for amounts under $200.

Outside the court, Crown counsel R. B. Hutchison said a number of the theft and fraud charges referred to the same information.

When pressed for more details, Hutchison would say only that the amount of money involved was "in the thousands of dollars, something less than $10,000."

He said the arrest came as the result of an intensive the result of an investigation by the RCMP commercial crime section under Sgt. Steve Holotuk.

A 27-year-old man pleaded guilty to six counts of filing false claims for unemployment insurance and was fined a total of $300 by Judge William Ostler.

Crown counsel Robert Buffam told the court the 12 weeks of benefits received by Knox amounted to $1230 and that Knox earned $2154.96 in that period. The total overpayment, Buffam said, was $1035.

Ostler ordered fines of $50 on each of the six counts.

Douglas Seads, of 2030 Milton, was fined $150 after pleading guilty to three counts of filing false UIC claims.

Buffam said Seads claimed for the period between July 25 and Aug. 22 when he earned $1413.43 with a construction firm. Total amount of overpayment, Buffam said, was $399.

Bail was refused 64-year-old John Paterson, of 226 Michigan, charged with two counts of gross indecency and one count of harboring a juvenile.

Trial by judge and jury was elected Feb. 14 and a preliminary hearing had been set for next Wednesday and Thursday.

Judge Blake Allan found Brian Attenborough, 24, of 656 Admirals, guilty of obstructing a peace officer and fined him $200.

The charge arose from an Oct. 31 incident at the Red Lion Motor Inn parking lot, 3366 Douglas, in which Attenborough put his hand in the area of a Saanich policeman's throat and pushed.

The incident began shortly after midnight when Attenborough, with three friends.

The incident began shortly after midnight when Attenborough, with three friends, noticed an altercation between a friend and two policemen.

Before passing judgment, Allan said the police and courts were well acquainted with activities that arise out of the Red Lion at closing time.

An Alberta man was fined a total of $600 by Ostler after pleading guilty to two Ontario charges from last August.

Donald Ronald Bard, 20, who came from Banff to clear the matter up, was fined $500 for a business break-in Aug. 5 and $100 for failing to appear for his trial Aug. 26 in London, Ont.

Mulligan told the court Swift was charged after hitting a motor vehicle travelling across his path at a stop sign and told court Swift had been fined $400 for impaired driving Jan. 19, 1976.

Ostler, who pondered at length over imposing a jail term because it was a second conviction, decided on the fine because he felt Swift was genuine in his admission that there was an alcohol problem which he was trying to face.

Military Banned From Elections

MADRID (Reuter) — The Spanish government announced Tuesday that senior government officials and military men are not permitted to participate in the country's first free general elections since the 1936-39 civil war. The announcement sets out rules for the elections for a two-house parliament, scheduled before the end of June. The announcement does not specify what seniority would bar civil servants from standing for election.

By DAVE BRADY
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The movie Rocky is drawing rave notices from film critics.

Some boxing types, however, aren't as uncritical, although most are pleased a film about their ilk is prompting so much response. Others, such as trainer Angelo Dundee, think the movie is on target.

The ghastly instant surgery by a not-quite-antispectic-looking "cut man" on the eye of Rocky Balboa (Sylvester Stallone) brings gasps in the movie houses.

But Rocky Graziano was stirred only to professional jealousy, as an actor.

"They copied that from my movies," he said.

Muhammad Ali, nearly always the punisher and only rarely the punished, similarly was unmoved by the occupational hazards.

Only his ego was contused, by Apollo Creed, his alter ego. "He stole my script," Ali complained.

Ali's trainer, Dundee, grew up in Rocky's South Philadelphia neighborhood. He lived near Palumbo's restaurant, where he will be inducted into the Pennsylvania Hall of Fame on May 8.

"The credibility of the Rocky movie was perfect. You remember Pat's Steakhouse in the movie? I worked there — Pat Olivieri's — as a kid. I made sandiwches. The gym scene was perfect. I liked the way they showed the attention given to the star of the gym, Big Dipper, the boxer they gave Rocky's locker. You don't take a boxer's locker away from him; that hurts."

"It was a typical gym," Ali says. "I liked the way Rocky was building up for the fight to make his big dream come true. I liked his determination. He didn't win but he did everything he could. It was a good movie, till near the end."

What didn't he like about the ending?

"That Apollo Creed stole my script. I'm so great he had to learn from me," said the champ.

Ali has been making a movie about his own life, and was reminded that his film might not similarly be nominated for an Oscar.

In a flash of modesty, Ali said, "If my movie is as good as that one, it will be all right."

Graziano, 55, says, "The movie? It's pretty good, but it's a love movie not a good fight movie. I know he (author Stallone) stole from me. He copied the cut-eye bit."

FINE ARTS ROLE TOPIC FOR DEBATE

"Fine Arts are essential to (for) civilization" is the topic to be debated tonight at 8 at Open Space Gallery's temporary premises, 1960 Government.

Pearson College will speak for the negative and Norfolk House School for the affirmative.

The debate will take the cross examination form which has been recently adopted in B.C.

As each speaker concludes a presentation he or she stands open to cross examination by a member of the other team. Following that the resolution will be opened for general discussion.

Pearson College team is a new club which has however already taken part in two tournaments on the island.

Admission is free and the public is invited to participate.

DREAMS BY MOONLIGHT lift the spirits momentarily even when they're indulged in on the fire-escape of a tatty walk-up apartment. Amanda Wingfield (Joyce Campion) has dreams very different from those of her son, Tom (Jim McQueen), but briefly they share a quiet interval in this scene from the Bastion Theatre production of The Glass Menagerie, currently playing at McPherson Playhouse. Performances continue through Saturday with 8 p.m. curtain time. (Barry Casson photo)

Friday Night Action

Friday is frequently the busiest night of the week on the Victoria arts-entertainment scene with a good diversity of offerings.

This Friday for example, chamber music tastes are being catered to by the city's noted Trio Victoria, which will be giving a concert at Craigdarroch Castle at 8 p.m.

At Oak Bay Marina Restaurant it's opera night again. The idea of dinner with an operatic program presented live by leading Victoria singers, has attracted considerable attention and enthusiasm.

This week the artists will be Art Wiebe, tenor, the arranger of the programs, Erika Kurth, soprano; Charles Dorrington, baritone, and Richard Margison, tenor.

For lovers of the dance, Belfry will be hosting the Prism Dance Theatre of Vancouver at the 1291 Gladstone cultural centre.

This performance begins at 8 p.m.

Playgoers have their choice of Bastion's production of Tennessee Williams' Glass Menagerie at McPherson Playhouse or a drive into the country where an international group of students from Pearson College are performing Shakespeare's The Tempest, Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at the new Spencer School, 1026 Goldstream.

Free Noon Concert

Music at noon in UVic's Maclaurin auditorium, Friday, will be presented by the New Music Club and is offered without charge to the public due to funding by the UVic Alma Mater Society.

The New Music Club is made up mainly of graduates and undergraduates majoring in composition in the UVic music department. Works to be presented have all been written by the group which has as its fundamental concept the practical arrangement of being both composer and performer.

Disabled Mountie Hoping for a Break

EDMONTON — Garth Hope, a former RCMP officer forced into a wheelchair by an incurable disease, is shoping for a break at a Canadian pension commission hearing here next week.

The break, if it comes, would be a pension of $1,000 a month or more.

Hope feels he deserves it, having missed by only one month more generous benefits provided under a new disability compensation program.

Since 1975, when at the age of 35 he was stricken with multiple sclerosis and forced to resign from the force after 14 years service, Hope has been unable to convince pension authorities of his desperate need for more than the pension he now gets of $212 a month.

Hope served most of his 14 years on the Prairies and was working in the Alberta headquarters and living in St. Albert, Alta., when he was stricken.

He has had some help from former colleagues, those in Alberta raising $10,000 and those in British Columbia adding another $12,920.

But confined to a wheelchair suffering a disease that grows steadily more crippling and with a wife, Dale, and three children, Hope has not much left but his name.

Mrs. Hope gives piano lessons to bring in extra money, but can't get an out-of-home job because her husband is confined to the wheelchair.

He will return here for the hearing from Westbank, B.C., where he now lives and try to convince the commission he is entitled to a larger pension.

Previous attempts failed because the federal body ruled he could not prove his disease "was a result of my job."

John McAfee, a Kelowna lawyer, who volunteered to help Hope, said that because no one can say what causes the disease, "the benefit of the doubt should go to Hope."

Reporter Gets Charles' Bird

NAIROBI — Prince Charles presented a stuffed bird with a wig of blonde hair today to a British journalist who reported that a beautiful blonde had joined the prince on safari in Kenya. After walking from a lounge at Nairobi airpot, where he said goodbye to Kenyan offaicials, the 28-year-old prince walked across to a group of reporters with a broad grin on his face.

First in line was John Penrose of The Daily Mirror, who had reported a blonde in the prince's camp in the Aberdare Hills of central Kenya.

"The Daily Mirror, is it?" the prince asked. "Well I've heard about this mysterious blonde. There you are then — a mysterious blonde bird."

In a piece of tissue paper the reporter found a stuffed olive pigeon with blonde hair stuck to its head.

TORONTO — Peter Reilly, a veteran newspaper, radio, television and magazine reporter and former member of Parliament, died of a heart attack Tuesday at his home. He was 44. Reilly was 19 when he began his career on the rewrite desk at The Canadian Press, then joined the CBC as a writer and editor. In 1963, after six years as a union organizer for the Toronto Newspaper Guild, he retuned to the CBC as Queen's Park reporter, then went to New York for two years as news correspondent at the United Nations. In 1966, Reilly became executive producer of CTV news and public affairs programs and was host of W5, a public affairs program. Later he was featured on CBC's Newsmagazine. Reilly also wrote for CBC radio, Toronto Telegram and Saturday Night magazine. Reilly was elected to Parliament in 1972 as the Progressive Conservative member for Ottawa West but was defeated in the 1974 general election. Before he returned to Toronto in 1975 as reporter-at-large for The Fifth Estate, a CBC-TV public affairs program, he was a radio moderator and a reporter at CJOH-TV, Ottawa.

COOK'S TOUR PROFITABLE

LAKE OSWEGO, Ore. — Jim Cook stole a $70 fishing rod from a store by slipping it inside his collar and down one pant leg. In another place, he heisted three wine bottles unnoticed.

In fact, Cook, of the Lake Oswego police department, shoplifted $1,100 in goods from 11 stores in less than two hours.

He had been asked to do so by the local merchants, who wanted to see how vulnerable they were to thieves.

All 11 businesses volunteered to be victims.

During the shoplifting spree, Cook said he never was challenged by a merchant, and the $10 from petty cash he was prepared to use as a cover never was spent.

Margaret At Ballet In Ottawa

OTTAWA — Margaret Trudeau made her first public appearance since her controversial week in Toronto and New York, attending the Ottawa opening of the National Ballet of Canada Tuesday night.

Mrs. Trudeau, accompanied by her husband sat in seats near the stage described by an attendant as "good but not the best."

Mrs. Trudeau mixed freely with the approximately 250 guests at a champagne reception held on the stage after the performance.

Celia Franca, founder of the National Ballet, returned to the company Tuesday night for a special one-night performance, dancing Lady Capulet to Frank Augustyn and Karen Kain's Romeo and Juliet.

Miss Franca, who retired from the artistic directorship of the company two years ago, danced in the special opening-night gala performance of the ballet set by John Cranko to music by Serge Prokofiev.

LURE OF LOVE USED BY PARROT OWNER

BRIXHAM, England — Taxi owner Tony Brooks drove around this fishing village Tuesday with the tape-recorded love call of a female parrot blasting from his cab.

Brooks said his pet parrot Noggin, a male, flew away last week.

"He's been spotted all around town but he refuses to come back to his cage, so I'm using love as a trap," Brooks said.

To lure back his blue Amazon parrot, Brooks recorded the squawking of a female parrot in a pet shop.

"That bird has ignored every attempt to get him back," he said.

"Now I'm playing on his emotions."

Identity in Question, Verdict Not Official

But in an unusual turn of events, Judge M. L. T. Drake ordered that the conviction of James Donald Meanney not be officially recorded and he adjourned the case until Monday.

Meanney pleaded not guilty to robbing the Mixer Shop in Nootka Court Oct. 27 of $120 while armed with a knife.

Freeman said the main issue was identification and prosecution was relying on one of its witnesses, James Lightbody.

McElmoyle described the prosecution evidence as minimal and insufficient to satisfy the court beyond a reasonable doubt.

The judge, after a half-hour adjournment to consider the case, said the crucial question was identified beyond a reasonable doubt as the robber.

He found Lightbody a believable witness who was able to pick out Meanney in a police lineup six weeks after the event.

Therefore, he said, he found Meanney guilty. He asked Meanney the routine question asked at this time — did he have anything to say before sentence was passed — and Meanney said he did.

"You got the wrong man," he said.

He said he was going to give evidence but didn't and that there was a man willing to testify for him that he was drinking at the Bastion Inn the night of the robbery was supposed to have taken place.

The judge replied that "the fact is the evidence convinced me that you were the person who was there" at the store.

Meanney said he had long hair at the time and didn't own a leather jacket as suggested.

"I look at it from your point of view and I would say I have my doubts," he said, adding that he could have provided an alibi "but I left it to you."

Drake adjourned the matter to the afternoon, noting that while judgment had been given it had not been entered.

When court resumed, McElmoyle applied to withdraw from the case in the interest of his client and also asked for an adjournment so Meanney could obtain a new lawyer.

The judge said in view of what was said after his finding of guilt and that there might be a possible defence, he would agree.

BOATERS FORM RESCUE GROUP

QUALICUM BEACH — A search and rescue operation has been organized by boating enthusiasts in the Nanoose-Parksville-Qualicum area.

The group, known as the District 69 Search and Rescue Association, will concentrate on marine emergencies this year but hopes to assist in land rescues in future, according to president Chris McLean.

McLean says the association needs more members, especially those with larger boats for work in heavy seas. The association soon will have a 24-foot boat at Deep Bay available 24 hours a day.

Several boats are also available in the Nanoose region and the association is looking for members with suitable boats based at French Creek.

Commercial fishermen would be especially welcome because they have larger boats and marine experience, McLean said. He said members may be reimbursed for fuel and other losses throught the Workers Compensation Board.

The association, anticipating a busy summer, plans safety training courses soon.

Calls for marine emergency assistance should be made to the RCMP, McLean advised. Officers will then asess the situation and if necessary call for help from the association, the Coast Guard or the provincial emergencies program.

"If anyone hears about a search on CB, please do not interfere," McLean said. "Don't try talking. If people want to help, they can call the RCMP."

Hungary Alone in Soviet Bloc In Allowing Unions Powers

By JOHN MORRISON

BUDAPEST - (Reuter) — Despite its economic problems, Hungary remains an island of relative political stability in the troubled Soviet bloc. As a result, the trade unions, relegated to the sidelines in most Communist countries, have been rescued from oblivion here to become one of the props of the delicate political consensus party chief Janos Kadar has built in his two decades in power.

Officials here are reluctant to comment on problems in East Germany, Czechoslovakia and especially Poland, where workers' riots last year forced the withdrawal of sudden price rises.

Nonetheless, they are confident such explosions are not likely in Hungary.

The slow return of trade unions from their role as mouthpieces of party policy in the Stalin era typifies Kadar's political approach. Under this policy, the unions no longer restrict themselves to welfare issues and the organization of work competitions.

Their influence as an economic pressure group is wielded by trade union chief Sandor Caspar, one of the most powerful members of the party politburo.

At factory level however, despite the fact that Caspar has obtained reforms such as a free legal aid service and wider rights for shop stewards, their role is limited.

"If there was a strike they would be the first ones to call in the police," was the caustic comment of one young worker.

Although they have none of the direct influence on wages which their counterparts in the West take for granted, the unions still bargain with the government over wage and price policy.

And, with Hungary's economic prospects looking gloomy over the next decade because of worsening trade terms, the unions form a vital bridge between the economic decision makers and the people.

The violent events in Poland proved to Hungarian leaders that, to be of any value to the state, trade unions must represent their members' interests, at least to a limited extent.

Last year, according to official statistics, Hungarian real incomes rose by only about one per cent, mainly because of a bad harvest.

This year's target is higher but real affluence still seems a long way off for people on an average wage of just under 3,000 forints (about $140) a month.

Basic services are cheap and a streetcar ride still costs one forint. But a Russian-made Fiat starts at 80,000 forints and there is a wait of several years for the small East German Trabant at 48,000 forints.

Meat prices were increased last year but one official said trouble was avoided because people were warned well in advance and were compensated in other ways.

These rises were due to government incentives to farmers, another key element in Kadar's delicate social and political balancing act.

Government ideologists have abandoned the myth that the people are a monolithic mass, marching shoulder to shoulder behind the party.

Politicians now admit that even in a Communist society there are different social groups whose interests have to be reconciled.

As a result, Kadar's main political task has been to divide the national cake in a way that satisfies the competing interests of workers, peasants, consumers and managers.

Aid for Engineers

TORONTO (CP) — North American Life Assurance Co. says it will provide seven $2,000-scholarships again this year to help Canadian engineers pursue post-graduate studies. The program, administered by the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers, is open to registered professional engineers who are members of one of the 11 licensing bodies in Canada.

Fishermen 'Sow' Their Waters With Shellfish

LA ROCHELLE, France (Reuter) — Fishermen in this historic Atlantic port are "sowing" the sea with young lobsters and other shellfish to counteract the ravages of pollution and their own greed.

In a novel environmental experiment, they have sprinkled the sea with 70,000 baby lobsters over the last four years. Now they are also repopulating the depths with 50,000 baby scallops to compensate for years of overfishing.

The scheme requires great patience and until now the fishermen have shown it. They have scooped up growing lobsters, noted that they are not fully grown and conscientiously thrown them back in again.

One local fisherman, optimistic about eventually "When we began this in 1973, reaping a rich harvest, said: nobody believed it. Now it is different. Everybody realizes the absolute necessity of preserving this natural heritage for the future of our profession."

Pollution from industry and the summer tourist invasion has decimated the sea. But their greed is also to blame.

Gaston Coutanceau, president of the local fishermen's union, said over-fishing had destroyed the natural habitat of local marine species.

"We must now revise our attitude and stop thinking of profit alone," he said.

In the past, 150 trawlers scrambled for the choicest catches. Today there are only some 20 full-time fishing craft in the La Rochelle area, scene of the Huguenots' desperate last stand against the Catholic kings of France.

The boost to the marine population first came with lobsters and scallops from "fish farms" in Britanny. But Coutanceau added: "We are only just beginning. We are thinking about stocking up with perch, sole and bream."

It all started with 7,000 pioneering lobsters in 1973.

The operation, financed with subsidies from local authorities, is to be sharply stepped up throughout 1977 with another flood of young scallops and 15 tons of pregnant scallops.

The cost so far: one million francs ($187,000).

Whatever the outcome in future catches, the experiment has certainly brought home to French fishermen one law of the sea—its riches cannot be plundered unmercifully without disaster resulting.

One fisherman remarked, "We will carry this experiment through to the very end. It is our only chance."

Mary Moore

This Takes the Cake

My cousin Muriel introduced me to her chocolate log in 1960. It is a sensational and luscious cake for very special occasions.

Today I have given you a choice of two fillings: One is French chocolate and the other is whipped cream.

CHOCOLATE LOG

Chocolate Sponge Batter:

¾ cup sifted cake-and-pastry flour
¾ cup granulated sugar
2 tblsp. baking powder
1 tsp. powdered instant coffee
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. cinnamon
¼ cup cocoa
¼ cup salad oil
3 egg yolks
6 tblsp. water
1 tsp. vanilla
¼ tsp. cream of tartar
3 egg whites
Icing sugar

Mix and sift first seven dry ingredients into a deep bowl. Make a well and add in order, salad oil, egg yolks, water and vanilla; beat with spoon until smooth. Add cream of tartar to egg whites; beat until egg whites form very stiff peaks. Fold first mixture gently into egg whites until well blended. Fold, do not stir. Line a 10"x16" jelly roll pan with waxed paper and grease paper lightly; turn batter into pan. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. for 12 minutes or until cake springs back when touched lightly with finger at centre. Immediately turn out on a clean towel covered with icing sugar. Peel off waxed paper; quickly cut off the crisp edges. Roll up in towel by starting at the longer side (enclosing towel in roll); cool well. Unroll and remove towel; spread cake with

FRENCH CHOCOLATE FILLING

3 squares (oz.) unsweetened chocolate
¼ lb. (½ cup) butter
1 cup unsifted icing sugar
2 eggs

Melt chocolate. Cream butter, add sugar while creaming. Beat eggs into creamed mixture thoroughly. Slowly add melted chocolate while beating. Spread filling on cooled cake and roll up and place seam side down on fancy dessert plate. Or fill with Whipped Cream Filling.

WHIPPED CREAM FILLING

Whip ½ pint whipping (32 per cent) cream until it begins to thicken then add 3 teaspoons icing sugar and continue to whip until stiff. Unroll chocolate log and spread evenly with whipped cream. Re-roll cake and place seam side down on fancy dessert plate. Dust top with more icing sugar if desired. If not to be used immediately, wrap in wax paper and refrigerate and remove one hour before serving.

Measuring Cream

Whites Discolored

Never beat egg-whites in an aluminum pan, as it is sure to darken them.

Onions: No Need to Cry

Credited with magical powers since the time of the pharaohs the onion has been called on through the centuries to assume roles as disparate as wart remover, earache remedy, and aphrodisiac. For the culinarily minded, the magic of onions is a more practical business; they add flavor to all manner of food, banishing blandness in the simplest hamburger or the most intricate sauce.

There are three varieties of onions available: red, yellow and white. They are graded as Canada No. 1 and Canada No. 2. Yellow onions are the most common ones. Choose firm onions with dry, brownish-yellow skins, with no signs of sprouting. Onions are always on hand since they may be kept for several weeks uncovered, in a dry and airy place.

Though onions have brought tears to the eyes of many, try the recipe below for "French Onion Soup." Food Advisory Division, Agriculture Canada, feels that it will bring only smiles to the cook who serves it.

FRENCH ONION SOUP

4 cups thinly sliced onion
3 tblsp. butter
7 cups beef bouillon
1 bay leaf
½ tsp. Worcestershire sauce
6 ½-inch thick slices French bread
¾ cup grated Swiss or cheddar or mozzarella cheese
¾ cup grated parmesan cheese

Saute onions in butter until golden (about 30 minutes). Add bouillon, bay leaf and Worcestershire sauce. Simmer 30 minutes. Dry bread 10 minutes at 350 degrees F. Remove bay leaf and pour soup into serving dishes. Combine two cheeses. Top each dish soup with one slice bread then ¼ cup cheese. Broil until cheese is melted (about 3 minutes). Six servings.

Vegetable Plus Soup

1 quart water
1 medium onion
1 small potato
2 medium carrots
4 small white turnips
1 rib celery, sliced
4 outer lettuce leaves, sliced
1 tablespoon barley
1 tablespoon chicken bouillon granules
Salt and pepper to taste.

Remove outer layer of fat from bones. In a large saucepot bring the bones and water to a boil; skim. Peel the onion, potato, carrots and turnips and cut into about ½-inch cubes; add to saucepot with the celery, lettuce, barley and bouillion granules. Simmer, covered for about 1 hour. Remove bones; cut off meat scraps, dice and return to saucepot. Remove as much of the fat as you like. Add salt and pepper and reheat. Makes about one quart.

Whole Wheat Is Definitely the Choice

eating right

By RUTH FREMES and ZAK SABRY

Are you confused about the nutritional value of whole wheat bread compared to white? Join the club. It seems that many of our readers have read some pro and some con about each bread and have concluded that they are betwixt and between when they stand at the bread counter, not knowing which is better.

A reader in Portage la Prairie even sent a clipping from the October issue of Consumer Reports (the publication of the U.S. Consumer Union) in which it advises the use of "enriched white flour rather than whole grain flour" and asserts that "whole grain flour may contain relatively high levels of phytic acid, which can bind up essential minerals." The justification for this rests on an Irish study that was conducted during the Second World War. This study "pointed up the deleterious effects of calcium binding by whole wheat bread."

Well now, what can we believe? In our experience the Consumer Reports nutrition experts overlooked several facts that have become known since the days of that study. If you have ever made Irish bread, you'll know that it uses soda to raise the dough — not yeast. Since then researchers have found that when yeast is used as our bread is made, an enzyme called "phytase" destroys the phytic acid.

Anyone who tells you that enriched flour is better than whole grain flour isn't telling you the whole truth. White flour lacks the wheat germ and bran. These are rich in B vitamins, minerals and fibre. Enrichment of white flour restores some of these nutrients namely thiamin (vitamin B1), riboflavin (vitamin B2), niacin (vitamin B3) and iron. It does not include the other B vitamins or minerals or fibre.

As it's the flour that makes the bread and whole wheat flour has these essentials, whole wheat bread is definitely the choice to make.

Dear Ruth and Zak:

Recently, I heard that milk is packed in the clear plastic bag (the quart size, with three packaged together) at high temperature and in the process tiny pieces of melted plastic get in the milk. This melted plastic would get in the body and probably be dangerous. Is this true and would waxed cartons be better than plastic bags? — L.E.T., Pointe Clair, Quebec.

Dear L.E.T.:

We doubt very much that any melted plastic would get in the milk packed in clear plastic bags. This would affect the strength of the bag and cause it to leak.

Sympathy, Not Tea

DEAR ABBY: Often a guest asked you whether a hostess should ask a drop-in guest if he (or she) wants any refreshments or to just go ahead and serve something. You said, "The gracious hostess doesn't inquire—she acts. Serve whatever you have, but drop-in guests shouldn't expect a feed-in." I disagree with you, Abby.

I am a pastor's wife, and oh, how I wish well-meaning parishioners would quit feeding my husband! His clothes are bursting at the seams. He is earnestly trying to lose weight, but with all the calls he has to make and people shoving goodies at him constantly, it is almost impossible for him to stay on a diet.

I am not saying he doesn't enjoy eating, because he does. But it would be so much easier for him to refuse it he were asked, instead of served. Please publish this. It might help. But don't use my name or the town from which this came. Thank you. — PASTOR'S WIFE.

DEAR ABBY: Often a guest's letter prompts me to say that I too have often been a guest in the homes of friends who know perfectly well that I am a Mormon. Yet they still say, "Shall I fix some coffee? Or would you rather have tea?"

Abby, please remind those thoughtless people that Mormons drink neither coffee or tea. Thank you.—PROVOKED IN PROVO

DEAR ABBY: Apropos Often a guest: The guest who gets me is the one who replies, when asked if he wants something: "If you are going to have something, I'll join you."—OFTEN ANNOYED

DEAR ABBY: Aha! I caught you. You aren't always right. I think the hostess who serves refreshments without first asking her guest if they want anything is presumptuous and inconsiderate.

It should be the privilege of the guest either to partake of refreshments or refuse. But if something is set before him, he feels compelled to eat it, lest he offend the hostess.

I have avoided calling on a certain relative who is a notoriously poor cook because she insists that her guests eat, regardless of the time of day or night. Her heart may be in the right place, but my stomach can't take it.—BICARB BETSY

DEAR ABBY: People who are so stupid as to refuse a cup of coffee when they really want one deserve to go without.

This business of having to BEG folks to have a cookie or a sandwich is for the birds. Whatever happened to the simple "yes" or "no" when something is offered? I ask once, and whatever answer I get is okay by me. I don't beg anybody to eat or drink anything in my home. — SARAH

DEAR ABBY: I don't agree with you.

I am on a limited budget, and I can't afford to prepare refreshments to throw out. I always ask if anybody wants anything first. And I am only too glad to serve whatever I have, IF it is wanted, but it bugs me to watch guests toy with their food and pretend to enjoy it when they really don't.—BUGGED

Calorie Counter Sauerbraten Supper

- 2 cups water
- 1 cup dill pickle liquid (drained from quart jar of dill pickles)
- 1 cup sliced onion
- ½ teaspoon ground ginger
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 beef bouillon cube
- 1 beef brisket (3¼ to 3½ pounds) well-trimmed of fat
- 7 medium carrots, cut in crosswise quarters
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1 small head 1 pound cabbage, cut in wedges
- 1½ cups sliced dill pickles
- 1 tablespoon flour

In Dutch oven, combine water, pickle liquid, onion, ginger, pepper, bay leaf and bouillon cube; heat to boiling. Add beef brisket. Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer until meat is fork-tender, 2½ to 3 hours. Refrigerate brisket in cooking liquid several hours or overnight to harden fat.

Remove fat from broth; discard. Add carrots and sugar. Heat brisket in cooking liquid to a boil; then reduce heat to low; cover and cook, about 10 minutes. Heat to boiling; reduce heat to low and cook cabbage until crisp-tender, 15 to 20 minutes.

Remove meats, carrots, cabbage and pickles to warm serving platter. Stir about 2 tablespoons water into flour until smooth. Gradually stir flour mixture into Dutch oven. Cook over medium-high heat until slightly thickened, about 2 minutes.

Hamming It Up? Sweet Peppers Help

tiny bennett

By TINY BENNETT

This week I spotted some magnificent red sweet peppers in the market that resolved a problem I had of dealing with some leftover ham. I bought them for stuffing.

What had happened was that I had cooked a large smoked shoulder ham expecting guests and when they could not come to dinner we dined regally on the ham, nice and hot and served with pickled peaches. The next day I served ham again for dinner, this time cold with a nice salad and crisp French bread.

On the third day I still had a lot of ham left on the bone and yet I just didn't dare set it out for dinner again, if I wished to avoid a mutiny in the house. So as I say, I saw the peppers and my problem was solved.

The sweet pepper is one fine vegetable that these days we seem to get all year around, from my own local area during crop time and imported from down south at other times. It is usually sold green with some tinges of red on the skins, but given time it turns a beautiful red color and in my opinion, when they are like this they are particularly sweet.

The peppers I found in my local store were the brightest red I've seen and pretty expensive at about 97 cents per pound. However I chose one large pepper for each serving and they worked out at about 30 cents each, which is quite areasonable cost per serving.

These sweet peppers — not to be confused with the long, thin hot peppers — can be eaten raw in a salad, where they add a lovely color to the table. They can be cooked in a hundred different ways, and are very easy and clean to handle.

However I had my own idea of a recipe in my head as I bought them and the knowledge of that left-over ham in the fridge that was beginning to haunt me. So here is what I came up with:

TINY'S STUFFED, BAKED SWEET-PEPPERS:

When I put my peppers out on the table I noticed they had quit a lot of sand clinging to the stems, so the first step should always be to wash them under a running cold water tap, and then carefully dry them with a clean dish towel.

Being large peppers I allowed one for each serving and cleaned them by carefully slicing off the stem ends and saving them, pulling out the seed heart and then banging them into the palm of one hand to knock out any loose seeds. I then put the stalk ends back with the bases so that they all matched up.

On the stove I put a wide but shallow pan, poured in one inch of water, threw in a dash of salt and when this came up to the boil I plopped in all the peppers, clamped on the lid and steamed them for five minutes.

This produces a glorious smell in the kitchen. At the end of the time I poured the peppers into a strainer and set aside to cool while I prepared the stuffing.

One can stuff peppers with just about any meat, or meat and rice mix, in which case it is necessary to pre-cook the meat with say onions and chopped celery and then mix with cooked rice and allow to cool, but my ham was so tasty I decided to be quite simple in my preparation. Each pepper will take on average about one heaped cup of stuffing.

The ham I ground, fat and lean through the large blade in my meat grinder, adding fresh ground black pepper, thyme and dried parsley.

In this instance I did not add salt, as ham is inclined to be a little salty, and this proved a sensible move, as the finished dish needed only a sprinkle on the outside of the baked pepper.

With everything assembled and the oven set at 375, I stuffed the ham mix into each of the peppers, including jamming some into the fluted chambers of the stalk end. I put a big dab of butter on top of the mix, dusted with some fine bread crumbs and stuck the peppers back together in their original shape.

They were then carefully placed in a small baking pan lined with side bacon and put into the central part of the 375 oven for 35 minutes.

This time is not necessarily an exacting one, as peppers retain that fine touch of crispness on longer cooking times. But mine turned out beautifully at the 35-minute mark, so it gives the reader an average time for the dish.

Stuffed peppers can be served with a dish of spiced rice, with just about any vegetable at hand, or even as a small side dish to go with a big rice pilaf.

My dish using the ham was a great success with my family and I intend to repeat it with other fillings.

For example while those lovely red sweet peppers are still around I intend to cook up a stuffing of finely chopped onions, celery and green peppers diced with curry, mix this together with cooked long-grain rice and bake in a 375 oven for 40 minutes without the bacon, for a delicious vegetarian curry dish.

Let your imagination go to work and see what you come up with. There is just no end to the variations that can be used for this delightful and cheap dish.

A slimmer James Beard

Cooking Expert Learns From Diet

By JOYCE MAYNARD

NEW YORK — On the covers of his cookbooks, or in the photographs that accompany his articles on food, James Beard is usually pictured — bald pate gleaming and belly jutting out roundly under his apron — holding platters that spill over with rich-looking delicacies, or raising a wine glass to his lips, or surveying a well-spread table as a benevolent monarch of a particularly fertile territory might oversee his kingdom.

If a chef's girth were measure of a chef's worth, James Beard, with his apple cheeks and sausage fingers and multiple chins would always have been the uncontested ruler of the kitchen and the groaning board.

But last July, at the age of 75, James Beard developed severe cardiac problems and phlebitis. So salt shakers and fats are banished from the kingdom now. James Beard has been put on a diet.

He no longer looks like a cookbook cover model. A tall, pleasant-faced man wearing blue denim pants and a denim smock-style shirt, he sat in the fern-filled sunroom of his Greenwich Village townhouse and talked about a life devoted to good cooking and good eating.

"I've learned a great deal from this diet, about flavor" he reflected. "When you can't use salt, you detect subleties you had'nt noticed before in the food. You're forced to be creative. You dream up new ways of doing things.

"Last night, for example, I wanted to have a chop. But there was the question 'How do I cook it?' I wracked my brain. Then — aha! — I arrived at my plan. I put the chop in a bed of tarragon surrounded by shallots and a very small amount of white wine. I covered my chop and put it in the oven."

When James Beard talks about food, it is as if he's telling a story. He gestures lovingly with his hands to demonstrate the tarragon bed, the tucking in of the chop, the splashing of the wine. He pauses for dramatic effect — leaving his listener in suspense, as if the future of the veal chop in the oven lay in some doubt.

Information on Plants

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Dear Readers: We've received so many letters requesting specific information on individual plants that we are going through the plants one at a time, sharing all pertinent information. You will want to clip these columns as we'll be introducing you to new potential plant friends, as well as reintroducing you to some old favorites.

ZEBRA PLANT OR APHELANDRA: The zebra plant has shiny, emerald-green foliage boldly marked with prominent white veins, which is now it got its common name. (Although we've never seen a green and white zebra, have you?)

There are 15 known varieties of this plant and the most popular and common one in the United States is the Squarrosa, which originates in Brazil. The flowers are tall spikes of bright yellow and are sometimes trimmed with orange.

The aphelandra can grow quite high, but it's best not to let it get taller than 18-20 inches in order to maintain its fullness. When the flower has wilted, the leaves usually fall off, leaving a long thin stak. When that happens, cut the plant back and put it somewhere out of sight, but not out of mind, and water just enough to keep alive.

In due time (and patience is called for here) small tufts of new leaves will appear, and hopefully a new, stronger pant wil grow. Once it does grow back, the leaves ought to remain. This plant requires very good indirect light near your brightest window and cool, slightly damp soil. It should not be allowed to dry out between waterings.

Humidity can be provided with the use of a dry well, which is nothing more than a saucer filled with a layer of pebbles, which are covered with water. As the water evaporates from the saucer, it provides humidity for the plant.

Veal Costly But Hard to Ignore

By PIERRE FRANEY
New York Times

NEW YORK — Although the best cuts of veal most assuredly rest in the luxury category where meats are concerned, they are difficult to ignore when it is a question of cooking gourmet-style within an hour's time. This article then is for those times when you wish to stretch the budget a bit for a hurried but special occasion.

First of all, if you're going to deal with veal in the kitchen, don't skimp. Buy the best chops and of an adequate size. Half a pound per person is about right.

Select veal from a butcher who can offer you veal of a pinkish white color. Run like fury if he offers you reddish meat; it's baby beef and certainly not worth an elevated price.

For the menu here — veal chops teamed with cauliflower that has been broken into "flowerettes" before cooking — the cooking time for both the meat and the vegetable is the same. Assemble all the ingredients, including a peeled, hard-cooked egg. Then start preparation of the meal with the vegetable.

Sprinkle the meat with salt and pepper and have it ready. Start cooking the cauliflower and as it simmers cook the veal. As they cook, chop the egg for garnish. Both dishes can be finished in seconds.

VEAL CHOPS WITH CAULIFLOWER

4 veal chops, about half a pound each
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
4 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons vinegar
½ cup chicken broth
Cauliflower with parsley (see recipe).

1. Sprinkle the chops on all sides with salt and pepper.

2. Heat three tablespoons of the butter in a heavy skillet and when it is quite hot, add the chops. Cook about 10 minutes or until golden brown on one side. Turn the chops.

3. Cook the chops until golden brown on the second side. Remove to a warm dish. Add the vinegar to the skillet and stir with a wooden spoon or rubber spatula to dissolve the brown particles that cling to the bottom and sides of the skillet. Cook until it is almost evaporated.

4. Add the chicken broth and cook briefly until the sauce is slightly syrupy. Swirl in remaining butter. Pour the sauce over the chops and serve immediately with the cauliflower.

Yield: Four servings.

CAULIFLOWER WITH SIEVED EGG AND PARSLEY

1 small head, about one and three-quarters pound, cauliflower
4 cups water
Salt
¼ cup milk
1 hard-cooked egg, peeled and put through a fine sieve
5 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
Freshly ground pepper to taste.

1. Trim away and discard the core of the cauliflower. Break the vegetable into "flowerettes." Add the pieces to a saucepan and add the water, salt and milk. Bring to the boil and simmer 10 minutes or until tender. Do not overcook or the vegetable will become mushy. Drain. At this point the vegetable may be set aside and the final preparation done later.

2. Prepare the egg and set it aside.

3. When ready to cook, heat one tablespoon of butter in a skillet and add the cauliflower pieces. Toss and stir briefly until the pieces start to take on color. Transfer to a serving dish.

4. Heat the remaining butter and add the sieved egg, salt and pepper to taste. Pour this over the cauliflower and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve immediately.

Yield: Four servings.

Glaucoma-Cataract Link Doesn't Exist

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, M.D.

Is glaucoma related to cataracts of the eye? Can they both happen at the same time? — Mr. T.O., N.J.

Dear Mr. O.:

They are two totally different and unrelated conditions. A cataract is a cloudiness of the lens of the eye. When this cloudiness progresses to the point of "maturity," light does not penetrate through the lens and interferes with vision.

Glaucoma is an increase in the amount of fluid within the eyeball itself. This increased pressure within the eye, when undetected and untreated, can be responsible for blindness.

There are many excellent techniques by which the early signs of cataract are detected. Once it has been established that a cataract is forming, the patient is kept under constant supervision until the ideal time for surgery is determined.

Few fields in medicine and surgery have made as many remarkable advances as those made in operations on the eyes. Surgery for cataract is becoming safer, with greater and greater assurance of maintaining good vision.

No examination of the eye is ever considered to be complete without testing the tension within the eyeball for the earliest detection of glaucoma. This, simply performed by a tonometer, has saved the vision of thousands of people who might otherwise not have known of the existence of glaucoma.

Glaucoma can be treated medically or surgically, depending on the kind of glaucoma and its severity.

Is cirrhosis of the liver always caused by alcohol? I am a milk drinker. Whenever I mention that I have cirrhosis I seem to get a raised eyebrow, intimating that I'm a boozer. — Mr. B.E., Calif.

Dear Mr. E.:

Cirrhosis of the liver is often mistakenly identified as the exclusive disease of the alcoholic. Certainly, alcohol plays a dominant role in its production. Yet obstruction of the bile ducts, the aftermath of viral hepatitis, severe malnutrition, long-standing heart disease, or drug intoxication may also cause cirrhosis of the liver.

Cirrhosis is a chronic disease that changes the architecture of the liver and interferes with its proper function. Many new and exacting tests can now pinpoint the cause of cirrhosis. When these causes are determined and eliminated, the progress of the condition can be curtailed.

It is my feeling that illness is a private possession. I see no reason why your need to publicize your illness, especially since it creates these problems for you.

SHRIMP A MEAL IN ONE

New York Times

NEW YORK — Shrimp belong to that category of foods that, by their nature, can be cooked to advantage in only a minute or so and are thus ideal for a hasty food preparation.

They are used here as a sort of "meal in one," cooked as they are with a tomato, anchovy and caper sauce and served with freshly cooked spaghetti.

To begin the meal, start cooking the tomatoes. The tomato sauce for this dish requires about 30 minutes.

As they cook, peel the shrimp — unless you want to go to the additional and generally useless expense of buying the shrimp already peeled.

SHRIMP WITH ANCHOVY TOMATO SAUCE AND SPAGHETTI

1½ pounds raw shrimp in the shell
4 tablespoons olive oil
2 teaspoons finely minced garlic
4 cups canned plum tomatoes
1 teaspoon crushed dried oregano
1 tablespoon crushed dried basil
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons anchovy paste
¼ pound mushrooms, thinly sliced
1 dry, small, hot red pepper, crushed
¼ cup drained capers
1 pound spaghetti or linguine

1. Peel and devein the shrimp. Rinse and pat dry. Set aside.

2. Heat half the olive oil in a small skillet and add half the garlic. Cook briefly and add the tomatoes, oregano, half of the basil, salt and pepper to taste. Cook, stirring often, about 30 minutes. Add the anchovy paste.

3. Heat the remaining oil and add the shrimp, the remaining garlic and basil and mushrooms. Cook, stirring, until shrimp turn bright red, about one minute. Add the mixture to the sauce. Add the hot peppers, capers, salt and pepper. Bring to the boil and serve on spaghetti or linguine cooked according to package directions.

Yield: 4 servings.

SAVORY PRIME RIBS

1 Prime rib roast beef (5 to 7 lb.)
1 garlic clove, halved
2 tsp. dry mustard
2 tsp. Worcestershire sauce freshly ground black pepper

Rub meat surface with halved garlic clove (insert slivered garlic cloves into meat if strong garlic flavour is desired). Place roast fat side up in shallow roasting pan (ribs form their own rack). In small bowl, make paste of dry mustard and Worcestershire sauce. Spread over lean surfaces of roast. Sprinkle freshly ground black pepper over all. Insert meat thermometer with tip in centre of thickest part of meat, but not touching bone or rest in fat. Roast in 325-degree F oven. Approximate cooking times are 23 to 25 minutes per lb. for rare (meat thermometer reading—140 degrees F), 27 to 30 minutes per lb. for medium (meat thermometer reading—160 degrees F), and 32 to 35 minutes per lb. for well-done (meat thermometer reading—170 degrees F). Allow approx. two to three servings per lb. Allow roast to "set" 20 to 30 minutes after removing from oven before carving, as meat will continue to cook after removing from oven. If allowing to "set," remove from oven when meat thermometer registers approx. 5 degrees lower than desired degree of doneness.

SPICY BROILED RIB BONES

If using thick cut prime rib beef, don't waste meat between bones. The next day, cut bones apart; remove any excess fat. Spread meat surfaces with either a mixture of softened butter, seasoned with dry mustard and Worcestershire sauce, or your favourite barbecue sauce. Roll in fine soft bread-crumbs. Broil, turning several times, until meat and bone are piping hot and crumbs are golden. Serve hot as an extra with spaghetti with tomato-mushroom sauce, and a crisp green salad. Allow one to two bones per serving; eat finger-style.

SPLIT PEAS

1 lb. (2¼ cups) dried split peas or lentils
1 large onion, chopped
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. thyme
½ tsp. pepper
1½ cups broth (ham, beef or chicken)
2½ cups water

A Simple Concept To French Cooking

By WILLIAM RICE
Washington Post

In an era when the boldness and simplicity have become hallmarks of French cuisine at its best, it is appropriate that an important new book for those who would cook in the French fashion has been produced from a bold and simple concept.

The book is "La Technique" by Jacques Pepin, a gifted chef who has worked and taught cooking in the United States for nearly 20 years. The subtitle, "an illustrated guide to the fundamental techniques of cooking," explains the concept. Through photographs Pepin shows the reader the step-by-step methods of creating dishes across the panorama of the French menu. It's television's Julia Child in still life.

Pepin believes, along with most serious teachers of cooking, that the heights of French cuisine are scaled through arranging and rearranging a series of building blocks. These blocks are fundamental techniques of the most structured of all national cuisines. Once learned, the cook is free of a slavish devotion to recipes. Ingredients change but the techniques don't. It becomes second nature to convert stocks into soups or sauces. Roasting, poaching, sauteeing are clearly defined, awaiting only the appropriate cuts or types meat or fish. In short, knowing the beginning, middle and end of the recipe plot, one needn't become lost in mundane details or scared of complexity. The cook can concentrate on perfecting execution. He or she becomes free to improvise.

Traditionally, this is done by working beside a more experienced cook, learning basics my observation and trial and error, all the while absorbing "tips." Pepin cannot save the reader from the anguish of error. In cooking you have to feel what is right as well as see it. What he can do, and what recipe books unfailingly fail to do, is illustrate the steps to perfect execution.

He begins by showing how to hold a knife and use it. As the book progresses through 170 techniques and 450 pages, he reveals methods of making pastry, of cooking and cutting meats and fish, of making exotic garnitures such as tomato roses and mushroom medallions or something as basic as separating, peeling and chopping garlic.

There are recipes, lots of them. Make stuffed eggs or crepes suzettes. Make melba toast. They are straightforward, though, because they are teaching tools. Follow them and the food will be good, but there's no cuisine minceur or shortcuts with convenience foods. There's no razzle-dazzle with herbs, spices or condiments, either. That's for you to add once you have absorbed the techniques.

The photographs are close-ups and reasonably detailed. Naturally, they lack a third dimension and are therefore imperfect. But they have been well-planned and executed. You do see what you should see. There are, as well, eight pages of colored plates in the heart of the book. Probably intended to relieve an inevitable textbook appearance, they reveal instead a compromise with quality on the part of the publisher.

This need not concern potential purchasers. Considering the number of unused recipe books home cooks surround themselves with considering the going price of cooking lessons, this book represents a bargain for anyone who uses it in the spirit of its author's intention. Pepin would not argue, I think, that a chef can be a genius. But he has clearly demonstrated for those outside the profession that the chef is not a magician.

Get Them To Eat Vegetables

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — If getting children to eat vegetables is a problem, try letting them help in the preparation, advise Michigan State University food and nutrition specialists.

Husking corn, shelling peas, snapping beans, washing squash or even helping to pick the produce at the market may provide the incentive to eat the vegetables, they point out.

Other suggestions:

When the child is beginning to eat the same foods as the rest of the family, give him small amounts of vegetables at the beginning of the meal, when he is hungriest.

Introduce new vegetables along with familiar, well-liked foods. If your child likes casseroles and other combination dishes, include vegetables in them.

Be enthusiastic in presenting new vegetables. Parents and siblings' attitudes can influence a child to like or dislike something even before he tastes it.

More Women In Agriculture

RIDGETOWN, Ont. (CP) — Jim Brimner, co-ordinator of the agricultural chemistry division at Ridgetown Colledge of Agriculture Technology, said female admissions have increased 500 per cent since 1967. Although the collegewas established in 1951, the first class of female students numbering 10 did not graduate until 1969. This year 50 women, comprising 24 per cent of the student body, are enrolled.

SONGBIRDS 'BETTER TO EAT'

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Many small songbirds that land in Cyprus to rest during migrations between Europe and Africa end up on restaurant tables or in pickling jars.

Catching and eating the small migratory birds is a centuries old practice in Cyprus and other Mediterranean countries including Southern Italy, France, Greece, Lebanon and Syria.

Cypriot law forbids capturing birds by nets or "lime sticks," the traditional apparatus for snaring the tasty little songbirds. But to date the law has been ineffective, wildlife protection societies complain.

Although no official records are kept, the annual catch in Cyprus during the spring and autumn migrations is "colossal," according to an official of one of the islands two ornithological societies.

Lime sticks are strips of wood coated with a sticky substance made of tree resin and honey. They are placed in trees and bushes to catch the birds as they land.

Hunting "ambelopoulia," or "birds of the vine trees," is centred in the southeast region of Cyprus. Most of the catch belongs to the blackcap warbler species.

In Ayios Theodhoros, a village of 2,200 near the southeast coast of Cyprus, a local grocer defends killing ambelopoulia.

"We like the birds, they are beautiful, but it's better to eat them," says Xenofon Pafitis, 70.

The ambelopoulia season for this village lasts for a month between September and October. Last fall, the villagers estimate, they caught 48,000 birds and sold them to groceries throughout the island for $24,000.

"We never have trouble selling the birds," Pafitis said. "They make good meze," appetizers eaten with wine or brandy.

The birds, boiled in water and then placed in vinegar, are smaller than eggs. They have a tangy, light taste and hair-like bones that are eaten along with the rest.

The birds are sent abroad as gifts to friends or relatives.

Soviets Flock To Films

MOSCOW (AP) — Workers in remote Siberian villages wait each week for the courier who makes his way over the frozen steppe carrying a movie projector and a reel of film.

Thousands of miles away in Moscow people sometimes climb out of bed before dawn to line up for the 7 a.m. showing of the latest French movie.

Across the Soviet Union—a country that loves ballet and opera, soccer and hockey movie-going is a national obsession. More people go to the movies in the Soviet Union than in any other country in the world—at the rate of 4.5 billion a year. Movie industry sources in Los Angeles estimated that 1.03 billion movie tickets were sold in the United States in 1975.

According to the latest available statistics a Russian citizen goes to the movies an average of 17.7 times a year while Americans average only five times a year, even though they have a greater variety of films to see.

Frenchmen go 3.5 times, Britons 2.4 times and Italians 10 times a year, according to 1973 statistics—the latest available— of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—UNESCO.

Countries with high attendance are Singapore with 17.1 times and Hong Kong with 15.1 times a year. But according to the UNESCO statistics, nobody likes movies as much as Russian citizens.

"It's just because Russian films are so good," one Russian movie critic said with a smile, but then stopped, unable to decide on another good reason.

Russians in the film-making world suggest that the reasons may include the low price of movie admissions, the difficulty in getting seats at a restaurant or other entertainment, and the drab quality of Russian television.

A movie ticket here generally costs the equivalent of 47 cents. A very few deluxe movie theatres charge 90 cents. But matinees are never more than 34 cents a showing.

Other evening entertainment is limited. Even in Moscow it's often a major project to find a table at a restaurant or a seat at the Bolshoi. In smaller cities, restaurants and theatres are few—but there are plenty of movie houses.

While the U.S. now has only about 16,000 movie theatres, the Soviet Union has 154,200, in addition to clubs that show films free of charge, according to the Soviet Institute of cinematography.

Moscow alone has 119, the newest of which recently opened with a 1,200-seat auditorium as well as a smaller 400-seat hall for children.

Television viewing is not as popular in the Soviet Union as it is in the U.S. But it is on nights when hockey games are shown.

Television in the Soviet Union is a mix of propaganda programs and travelogues, military bands and children's choruses, pallid variety shows and operatic arias, non-controversial films and new programs that emphasize farm and factory achievements.

By contrast, the movies here are of technically high quality, offering increasing social commentary, romantic escapism and just a dash of sex and violence—not much, but certainly more than television.

SPAIN EASES CLAMPS ON NATIONAL TV

By KEVIN DUNN

MADRID (Reuter) — The government has begun relaxing its iron grip on national television as Spain prepares for the first democratic general elections in 40 years.

The role of television, until now a state monopoly, will be crucial when scores of new political parties bid for the support of Spain's 22 million voters.

In an apparent move to ensure official neutrality in the forthcoming campaign, the government has set up an independent governing council to direct the medium's two channels.

Speaking at the council's inauguration, Information Minister Andres Reguera Guajardo said the government wanted television to be at the service of all Spain—its regions, political parties, and economic and social groups.

"It is obvious that if national television and radio are . . . to be at the service of the national community, they cannot be controlled exclusively by government," Reguera said.

But opposition parties, already elbowing for position in the elections which are due before the end of June, are concerned that the council will have only token independence while the television director-general's office remains directly responsible to the cabinet.

Politicians, who were silenced under the dictatorship of the late Gen. Francisco Franco, will rely on television to ensure that their manifestoes are spread throughout the country.

The access to television time is a stock demand of opposition parties negotiating handling of the elections with Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez, himself a former television director-general.

The opposition also wants to put Reguera out of a job. Abolition of the ministry of information, set up by Gen. Franco to control news, is essential if the campaign is to be clean, they say.

But since the dictator's death, television—which used to show little more than imported soap operas interspersed with government communiques—has opened up considerably.

One of Gen. Franco's favorite methods of dissuading workers from joining demonstrations was to order the screening of a major soccer match to coincide with the protest—a technique no longer used.

Singapore Pirates' Treasures Come in Duplicate

By PETER CALVERT

SINGAPORE (Reuter) — A new breed of pirates has emerged in Asia and is reaping greater profits than the pirates' seagoing forbears ever dreamed of.

All around the continent, "trade pirates" are illegally copying branded goods and selling them, often as the genuine article.

Working from small factories or even houses, they produce everything from ladies' underwear to "Swiss" watches. Many of their goods are exported, or smuggled to other Asian countries.

They are a problem for governments and companies in almost every non-Communist Asian country.

The most lucrative and commonly found copied goods are music cassette tapes and books but the pirates turn their hands to almost anything that can be duplicated easily and sold at a profit.

Sometimes their efforts end in tragedy. In Hong Kong a number of people died last year after drinking methyl alcohol which had been sold as Chinese wine.

On the other hand, they can occasionally bring benefits.

In India, book pirates are credited with forcing foreign publishers to sell publishing rights to Indian companies to prevent the pirates from capturing the market.

The Philippines has institutionalized the copying of educational books to keep prices low. For the same reason, Indonesia has authorized some companies to copy western music tapes.

But generally pirating means the disruption of markets, heavy losses to legitimate companies and a reduction in the incentive to invest in countries which badly need capital.

The reasons for widespread illegal copying in Asia are obvious. It provides small businessmen with a slice of a market often dominated by large Western companies and controls on trade and manufacture are traditionally looser than in Western countries.

"Tracing the pirates is difficult enough," said an executive of a large electronics company. "Then obtaining proof against these small manufacturers is a problem. Local courts often have sympathy for the small man whom they see as fighting for a living against a giant company."

Much of the illegal copying is done in the bustling cities of Hong Kong and Singapore. Trade sources say the two cities are the world's major exporters of pirated cassette tapes.

Apart from being the most common product of the pirates, cassettes provide good examples of the profits from illegal copying. In Singapore a legal casette may cost around $5.50. A pirated one containing the same music will be sold for as little as $1, yet it can be produced with raw materials costing only about 20 cents.

The pirate has virtually no overhead costs, pays no tax and may sell hundreds of thousands of cassettes each year.

Copying can be done on ordinary hi-fi equipment but some pirates have high-speed duplication machines which can record six one-hour casettes in five minutes.

Some 90 per cent of the records and tapes sold in Malaysia last year are believed by the trade to have been pirated. Malaysian music stores said the pirated music cost them some $17 million in sales.

The recorded music industry does, however, provide one of the few examples of what may turn into effective action by the legal producers.

Retailers and manufacturers in Singapore have formed the Singapore Phonograph Association, whose primary purpose is to stamp out pirate competitors. In one raid, police seized some 5,000 pirated cassettes. But so far the association's action is only a small local barrier against a flood of pirated tapes.

Hong Kong has probably the widest variety of illegal manufacturers.

The list of pirated goods produced or sold there includes watches, foodstuffs, detergents, transistor radios, antiseptics, soft drinks, clothing and cosmetics. Factories have been found copying well-known brands of jeans and jewellers have been prosecuted for placing false hallmarks on gold ornaments.

Taiwan also exports large numbers of copied watches but police action has helped reduce the problem, industry sources said.

Singapore also has its pirate specialties.

One multinational electronics company estimates it is losing the best part of $1 million through the pirating of its flourescent light fittings.

The fittings can be produced with only limited equipment. A typical pirate factory might employ seven or eight people and occupy about 100 square yards of space.

Taiwan is known for its pirated books.

The first book pirating in the late 1950s was the Encyclopedia Britannica, which was sold at about one-tenth of the true price. Since then all sorts of copied books have been sold on a booking market. The government has, however, prohibited their export.

The pirate industry in Indonesia is still in its infancy because of shortage of skilled labor and sophisticated equipment, but the country provides a ready markket for pirated goods.

Japan, with its heavy industry and strict trade controls appears to be the only non-Communist Asian country where there is no pirating. Japanese copmanies are often the victims of the pirates.

Teak 'Cottage' Industry

BAN HAI VILLAGE, Thailand (Reuter) — There is something strange about this village in the teak forests of northern Thailand. Everybody seems to be building an extra house.

The village is surrounded by valuable teak trees but the villagers are forbidden to sell teak to the Chinese dealers who drive up from the city of Chiang Mai.

The law, however, does not prevent a villager from selling his house.

So the canny villagers build a house made entirely of teak, next to their own and then sell it to the merchant, who dismantles it and carts away the timber.

All day long the village rings with hammering and sawing as the villagers rebuild a house which will be sold over and over again.

It is quite a lucrative business, as houses fetch between $250 and $500—what most villagers could expect to earn in a year.

But in Ban Hai, the entire building, from roof to floor, is made from the beautiful brown wood which is popular around the world.

The villagers normally have large families and they explain their need for an extra house to the authorities by claiming they need more room for growing children.

When they build the extra dwelling, they knock the nails in lightly so that the planks can easily be removed for the next sale.

European Outlook Is Gloomy

PARIS (AP) — The economic outlook in Western Europe for 1977 is sombre, with optimism about prospects for a basic recovery a firefly flicker at the end of a coal chute.

Everywhere, from Portugal to Austria's border with Czechoslovakia, there is a basic lack of confidence, according to a survey by The Associated Press.

The horizon is grey even in Switzerland, despite its remarkably stable currency, its 1.6-percent inflation, the lowest in the West, and 0.6-per-cent unemployment.

The Swiss government's commission on economic trends talks of a "prolonged lull," more decline in industrial activity, and the possibility of a "slightly recessionary development" during the year.

Even in Denmark, which has lowered unemployment to 6.8 per cent and inflation to 7.8 per cent after being a leader on the continent during the early days of the recession, only 12 per cent of the population think the economy will improve, while 45 per cent believe it will worsen, according to a government survey.

In many places, notably West Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Austria and Belgium, economists said they are hoping that programs initiated by President Carter could stimulate world trade. But there was some doubt this would happen. Said J. Van den Beld of the Dutch central economic planning office: "Indications are that the new president will go slowly and that growth will be slower than before while unemployment will show no rapid decrease."

Unemployment in the United States was down to 7.9 per cent in December and the inflation rate for 1976 was 5.7 per cent.

In Britain, a number of industrialists, bankers and officials think there are signs of an upturn in their devastated economy.

On a wider scale, every expression of optimism from government officials in Britain, France, West Germany, is contrasted by deeply negative statements. Gosta Sohman, finance minister of the new, non-Socialist government in Sweden which does not face elections for three years, described the outlook as bleak.

Student Jobless Fear Root of Italian Unrest

ROME (Reuter) — A growing army of Italian students with little hope of getting jobs is sparking unrest on university campuses.

There are fears that student violence such as that just seen in Rome may increase. Though the immediate dispute is over educational reform, at the heart of the students' worries is the looming threat of unemployment.

A recent conference revealed that one million young Italians are out of work—and more than half of them hold a degree or diploma.

An Italian sociologist, Francesco, Alberoni, said recently that graduate unemployment was potentially the most explosive problem the country faces.

Students have already seized control of many campuses around the country and staged a violent demonstration against a Communist trade union chief at Rome University before they were ousted by police.

This rebuff stunned the Communist party and its central committee ordered a "serene and rigorous self-criticism on the part of the Communists for the errors and uncertainties which have occurred."

"No one is listening to us," says one student from Palermo University. "If no one listens soon, I'm afraid there will be more violence. I hope not."

The troubles were sparked by a government circular in January restricting the students' choice of subjects and the times when they could take examinations.

A peaceful demonstration against this circular by some 3,000 Rome University students was broken up by another group who, according to the demonstrators, were not students.

This set off a wave of protests and students took over many campuses, complaining also about more unpublished government reform plans.

In Rome, after a two-week campus occupation mainly by extreme leftists, the Communist party sent trade union chief Luciano Lama, heavily protected by party militants, in to appeal to the students to return to class.

Universities are often extremely crowded because anyone who finishes secondary education is entitled to study at them—and as a result many are unable to get into the lecture halls.

One student in Rome commented: "A lot of us are here because we have nowhere else to go and we don't think there will be anywhere to go afterward."

Many students end up teaching themselves and this has its problems too. "In the three years that I've been here, I've never touched a real body," said a medical student. "Maybe I won't until I qualify."

Both the Communist and the minority Christian Democrat government reform proposals are aimed at reducing the number of students.

But the students reject them, saying instead that existing facilities should be expanded.

"The so-called reforms mean, more restrictions, less educational freedom and they'll stop the children of the working class from coming to university," one student complained.

SPACE FOR DISABLED

EDMONTON (CP) — The government moved Tuesday to provide parking spaces specifically for vehicles carrying disabled persons in front of all provincial buildings.

The legislature voted unanimously in favor of a motion by Thomas Walker (PC—MacLeod), who recommended the special provision. The motion also suggested municipal governments be encouraged to provide the same service to the handicapped in front of town or city buildings.

Walker told the legislature that while he has listened to "an awful lot of blathering" in the house, his motion gave MLAs a chance to do something "useful, humanitarian and timely."

"This is a simple, straightforward motion calling not for money, nor labor, nor indeed for a great deal of high intensity thought of any kind," he said.

Man. Stores Must Shut For One Day

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba's retail businesses would be given the option of closing either Saturday or Sunday if a bill now before the provincial legislature receives approval.

The proposed legislation makes it clear that chain-store operated by one management would not be able to keep some of its stores open Saturdays and others on Sundays.

The Retail Businesses Holiday Closing Act, promised by the government in an effort to curb a rash of Sunday grocery store openings last year, was printed and distributed Tuesday.

The legislation would also require retail businesses to close on holidays, defined as New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day and Christmas.
Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiv-

There is also a miscellaneous provision to permit exemption by cabinet of a business where it would "work hardship on the public."

The legislation provides penalties of fines from $1,000 to $5,000 for those found guilty.

Alta. to Fund Small Builders In Bid to Cut Housing Costs

EDMONTON (CP) — Housing Minister Bill Yurko unveiled a $25-million program Tuesday to bring more competition into the land development industry and lower the cost of serviced residential lots.

The residential land development program will provide loans to small construction companies for purchase and servicing of land.

The Alberta Home Mortgage Corp. will provide the loans, at 10-per-cent interest, to firms whose gross annual revenue is not more than $10 million.

"Generally, only large land development companies have the capacity to obtain front-end financing at reasonable interest rates in order to bring large parcels of serviced lots on the open market," Yurko told the legislature.

The program "will permit many small residential builders to re-enter the land development business and thereby stimulate more competition in the house building and lot servicing market."

The maximum loan for any project under the program is limited to 90 per cent of the builder's buying and servicing costs or up to $10,000 a single family lot, said Yurko. The loans must be repaid in three years and project size is limited to 50 acres or 150 residential lots, whichever is less.

The program also includes a provision for 10 per cent of the single-family lots in a project to be set aside for house-building co-operatives.

Later, during question period, Yurko said he didn't know exactly how many small residential builders would benefit from the program.

"But I would like to suggest that it is fairly substantive."

New Democratic Party Leader Grant Notley asked if the $10,000 ceiling on loans for each single-family lot would be sufficient in Calgary and Edmonton, where land prices have risen dramatically.

Yurko said the effectiveness of the program in the two urban centres would be determined during the next year.

"The program, of course, can always be adjusted and the $10,000 ceiling on loans for each single-family lot would changed if it is necessary."

Talks Stand Still

REGINA (CP) — Negotiators for 300 provincial liquor board employees will meet here next week to discuss a lack of progress in contract talks with the board.

Ralph Ermel, a spokesman for the government employees association, said the board is trying to force the employees to go on strike.

Police Truck Away Pickets, Sympathizers

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ten persons were remanded Tuesday for two weeks on mischief charges relating to incidents at th gates of Griffin Steel Foundaries Ltd.

Police have taken away dozens of pickets and sympaopened Feb. 28 in face of athizers since the plant restrike dating back to last September by about 140 members of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers.

The arrests were made after police warnings that it was illegal to blockade the gates and prevent entry to vehicles carrying management personnel or non-striking employees. Most of those taken away were released without charge.

Airline Opts Out

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — Air Canada will not be able to service Prince Albert with DC-9 jet service at any time in the foreseeable future, airline officials told city council Tuesday afternoon.

Air Canada indicated an interest in providing service two years ago, but were unable to do so because of the economics of scheduled air travel and general inflationary pressures. The city's only option is air service by a Transair application for a Winnipeg-Prince Albert-Calgary route.

Cars Top Beef List

WINNIPEG (CP) — The government-run Manitoba Consumers' Bureau reports complaints were up 13 per cent in 1976 compared with the previous year, according to the annual report of the consumer, corporate and internal services department.

The report showed automobile owners appeared to be the most disattisfied consumers in the province.

Of 2,090 complaints received by the bureau in 1974, 444 were related to automobiles.

Next in line for the number of complaints received involved home improvement, with 272 protests. Many of these problems were in the area of the sale and installation of doors and windows.

Fraud Investigated

NORTH BATTLEFORD, Sask. (CP) — The RCMP is investigating a complaint about misappropriation of funding allocated by the department of Indian affairs, Sgt. Robert Young said Tuesday.

He said criminal charges could be laid, ranging from misappropriation to fraud and theft.

Big UIC Swindle

EDMONTON (CP) — Bernard James Wisniewski, 26, a University of Alberta student, was sentenced Tuesday to seven months in jail when found guilty of defrauding the Unemployment Insurance Commission of $22,147 during a four-week period.

District Court Judge William Stevenson said 'tit was a game, but a dangerous game."

Court was told Wisniewski made 65 applications for benefits, using social insurance cards with 52 different names. He rented 63 post office boxes using those names and those of corporations and disbursed the money through 56 bank accounts, four in his own name.

Defence counsel Ken Kolthammer maintained the second-year science student had devised the scheme and "he enjoyed beating the system."

Alberta in Deficit

EDMONTON (CP) — A nine-month financial statement released Tuesday by provincial treasurer Merv Leitch shows Alberta had a budgetary deficit of $163 million by Dec. 31, 1976, compared with forecasts of a $123-million surplus by the time the fiscal year ends in two weeks.

The statement showed gross revenue up $345 million from the same last year to more than $2.5 billion. Most of the increase came from natural gas royalties, which jumped to $502 million from $290 million.

Crude oil revenue was up by $55.9 million to $776 million.

Leitch's statement said most of the government's spending is done in the first half of a fiscal year.

Leitch said Pacific Western Airlines, the Alberta Energy Company and the Alberta Educational Communications Corporation have independent audits but the government is considering having a provincial auditor verify the statements.

Teach French . . . Or No Cash

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government should hold back $1 billion in education payments to the provinces this year unless they agree to make the teaching of a second language, especially French, a requirement for admission to university, a commons committee was told Tuesday.

Two back-bench British Columbia MPs, Liberal Markè Raines (Burnaby-Seymour) and Progressive Conservative Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay), told the Commons broadcasting committee that second language instruction should be required in university.

Raines said he was astonished that children could progress through the entire educational system without studying French and suggested that federal payments for provincial post-secondary education be held back until the provinces agree to provide second language instruction.

Johnston said many French teachers in British Columbia have had to take other jobs because of a shortage of students.

There are fewer students because the universities do not require French as an admission requirement, he said.

The government will pay the provinces more than $1 billion for post-secondary education in the fiscal year starting April 1 under a new school funding formula replacing a five-year-old cost-sharing arrangement that expires March 31.

Quebec Appeals On Ads

OTTAWA (CP) — Quebec, with the support of five other provinces, argued Tuesday in the Supreme Court of Canada that it has the right to stop advertisers from using cartoon characters to promote products.

The province wants the court to agree it has the constitutional authority to regulate advertising aimed at children and carried on radio and television.

It is seeking a reversal of a ruling by the Quebec Court of Appeal that it does not have this right because if falls under the regulation of broadcasting, a federal responsibility.

Prisons Boss Backs 'The Devil' He Knows

By GERARD McNEILL

OTTAWA (CP) — Penitentiaries Commissioner Andre Therrien indicated Tuesday he wouldn't be keen on having the prison system separated, like the RCMP, from the public service.

"I don't really mind the devil I live with now," Therrien told members of a special Commons subcommittee looking into the federal prison system.

The MPs have been told across the country that getting rid of incompetent employees is almost impossible because Public Service Commission rules apply to the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

One example in Ontario involved a group of guards at Millhaven penitentiary who officials say are running an "overtime racket" and have intimidated guards who buck them. But enough evidence to get rid of them under the public service system can't be found.

The MPs say they are nearly convinced that the penitentiary service should be separated and its employees given better pay, better training, and higher standards of work performance.

Therrien said the idea had sounded attractive to him but after study, it had lost some of its appeal. He hadn't made his mind up.

"It's bad enough that nobody can be fired in the public service but it's intolerable that nobody can be fired in the penitentiary system," subcommittee chairman Mark MacGuigan said. Erik Nielsen (PC — Yukon) had broached the subject.

MacGuigan said the lack of discipline of the guards had been "striking" and there was a feeling among members that separate status was needed.

"This is not a question of doing away with the union," he said. "It would give you a means to control the service."

The subcommittee went into closed session near midnight to ask questions that Therrien said might affect a new contract being voted on this week by the prison guards.

Therrien said it is difficult to find the right outsider to act as the non-partisan figure in hearing complaints by guards against prisoners. Currently prison directors hears such complaints and almost invariably rule against the prisoner.

Premiums Top Gripes To AIB

OTTAWA (CP) — High premium rates for home, auto and casualty insurance continue to be the single largest source of consumer complaints to the anti-inflation board.

The board issued a statement Tuesday saying that February was the fifth successive month in which complaints about insurance rates led the list of consumer gripes.

In a two-week period ended Feb. 28, insurance complaints made up 27 per cent of the total 643 consumer grievances that came before the board.

In the 17 months of the anti-inflation program, there have been 6,508 insurance complaints.

The board does not list any actions it plans to take about the complaints.

Other major complaint areas include food, particularly concern over prices for beverages and fresh produce, charges for personal services, utility rates and fuel and rent, the board says.

Mirabel 'Falling Apart at Seams'

OTTAWA (CP) — Mirabel Airport, the federal government's $600-million white elephant in the Quebec boondocks is coming apart at the seams after less than two years of operation.

The problem lies in the airport's runway system, where a special sealant has started deteriorating and will cost at least $100,000 a year to maintain.

The cause of the sealant's failure to perform is a lack of adhesion related to a number of factors," the transport department said in a written reply to Commons question from Ontario Tory Perin Beatty.

The department added, however, that it was interested in improving the performance of these materials for the Canadian climate, a statement that was rejected immediately by Beatty and colleague Jack Ellis.

Both said satisfactory Canadian materials already are available and Ellis, a pilot who also has worked in the pre-cast concrete industry, said there is no excuse for the Mirabel runways deteriorating already.

The airport was opened in the fall of 1975 after years of wrangling.

Ellis said his main concern is that failure of the sealant, which is designed to keep water from seeping under the runway slabs, might result in the airport becoming unsafe.

Both he and Beatty suspect that the contractor, whose name was unavailable Tuesday, used a cheap sealant imported perhaps from the United States, where most airport runways are not subjected to the climatic extremes found n Canada.

Their suspicion evidently is shared by the transport department, which indicated that it is trying "through legal consultation" to determine who will pay the $100,000-a-year repair bill.

Beatty said this latest problem with Mirabel likely will mean that even more people will reroute their international flights through Toronto rather than Montreal.

He also accused the transport department of "cooking" the traffic figures for Mirabel to make it look as though there are more aircraft using the facility than there actually are.

Polysar Probe Faces Problem

OTTAWA (CP) — Refusal of an employee of a government-controlled company to testify may frustrate an investigation by the Commons public accounts committee into questionable overseas payments made by Polysar Ltd., opposition MPs said Tuesday.

The MPs bridled over statements from N. B. Roberts, a former general manager of Polysar International SA, that he will not appear to testify since the committee has not promised to steer clear of questions that might get him into trouble with Swiss law.

The committee is looking into allegations that kickbacks were made by the company and could have been used by customers to duck taxes and foreign exchange regulations and to defraud minority shareholders.

Bill Clark (PC-Vancouver Quadra) said he wanted to consider a motion to cease further hearings and to report back to the Commons that the committee's hands have been tied.

Children Write Own Paper

NEW YORK (Reuter) — The newsroom was silent, the tape recorders turned off, the interviews with famous and the reporters safely in school, learning "reading, writing and arithmetic."

The newsroom belongs to the Children's Express, a glossy monthly that believes it is starting a revolution with a reporting staff aged 12 and under.

It claims it is the only professional magazine in the world written entirely by children and even claims a White House correspondent as close to the centre of power as is possible — nine-year-old Amy Carter, the president's daughter.

Children's Express publisher Robert Clampitt says that thanks to the magazine "Children have the power of the press for the first time ever."

What they and Clampitt have done with it so far is impressive. Special Express supplements written and published at the Republican and Democratic conventions won worldwide attention and produced at least one major "scoop."

As Jimmy Carter announced his choice of vice-president to a room full of reporters and television cameramen, Express staff roamed the same room handing out issues that proclaimed he picked Walter Mondale.

The timing was perfect, for there is nothing like being in print with a scoop as it is being announced.

Clampitt, a 49-year-old lawyer and businessman, echoing editors and publishers everywhere, says his young reporters can talk a good story, even if they are not able to write it.

And the technique at Children's Express is to tape-record everything starting with the reporters' feelings about what he is to cover.

Then the tapes are played back and adult editors select what is to be used. The reporting staff is generally 12 and under with the youngest reporter who has been used being aged seven.

Children aged between 13 and 17 are used as assistant editors.

They provide logistical support for the younger reporters, conduct roundtable discussions, research and set up stories and accompany reporters on assignment.

The young staff changes from issue to issue with Clampitt trying to give as many young people as possible a chance to work.

The stories in Children's Express vary from such as "are dentists putting vampires out of business?" a discussion of whether or not vampires exist, to super-serious and touching discussions of what it means to lose a parent or to be a victim of child abuse.

In all cases, the words and feelings are of the children writing the story.

Clampitt sees television as effecting a revolution in that children find it entertaining and interesting without there being a similar development in magazines aimed at children.

He sees Children's Express as filling that void because children are as intensely interested as ever in what other

Children's Express has a press run of about 400,000 copies for each of its three issues, but the returns are not yet in on how many copies were actually sold.

Publisher Clampitt says the magazine still is losing money, as many new publishing ventures do at the start, but claims that the response has been excellent.

Children's Express has run a cover story on Amy Carter, which listed her as its correspondent in the White House.

Clampitt says he is hoping, "She will become our correspondent in the deepest sense and really record what is going with her." He would also like Amy to act as White House guide for a feature piece.

Tricking Those Bugs

BURNABY (CP) — A team of scientists at Simon Fraser University is using chemical trickery to develop an accurate method of counting insects in a specific territory.

If successful, the system could replace the accepted practice of precautionary spraying, reduce the amount of insecticides in the environment and save money for farmers.

Cam Oehlschlager, an associate chemistry professor and a member of the six-man team, said in an interview that the chemicals in an onion's odor which attract the destructive onion maggot have been identified and artificially reproduced in the lab.

"If you want a picture," he said, "the molecules of the chemical are like a key and the insect has the keyhole.

"We have to find what size and shape of molecules will fit the keyhole. In fact, we've found quite a few."

Field trials this summer will be combined with color traps proved effective in field testing last summer.

Robert Vernon, another team member, said he discovered the onion maggot fly is attracted to yellow. He made yellow traps as monitors on three farms.

Vernon managed to save one grower 10 sprays out of the normal dozen for the year. The farmer also lopped $200 from his spraying bill and only three-tenths of one

RAIN PATROL: Elizabeth Huggins, a North Vancouver school crossing guard, uses an umbrella for rain protection and sits back with a good book while awaiting youngsters' trek from school.

Even the Experimenters Bored

LONDON (Reuter) — The British ministry of defence is financing some terribly boring experiments to find out what sort of person handles boredom best.

The tests, conducted by the Burden Neurological Institute, in Bristol, involve shutting a volunteer in a small black room for two or three hours while he watches a video tape image of a model landscape.

Nothing moves on the screen, except very rarely when a toy vehicle glides across. The viewer, if awake, pushes a button to show he has seen it and another button to indicate whether it is a car, van or truck.

The whole thing is so boring it even bores the experimenters, the institute's science director, Dr. Ray Cooper, said in an interview.

But then there are many jobs, especially in the defence sector, during which nothing happens for hours. When something does happen, however, the nation's fate could depend on the response. Monitoring a radar scanner is the most obvious example.

Among civilians, long-distance truck drivers, train engineers, pilots and expressway drivers have a similar problem.

Besides finding which personality type best copes with boredom, Dr. Cooper and his team are also searching for physical signs revealing mental inactivity.

While in the room, the volunteer is wired to brainwave monitoring devices and instruments keeping tabs on his eyeball movement, eyelid droop, muscle activity and tension, heart rate and what Dr. Cooper calls "general fidgit."

The program, costing thousands of dollars a year, has been running for three years, but most of that time has been spent setting it up. It could run 10 years said Dr. Cooper, before achieving definite results. It is hard to monitor the activity of people doing almost nothing.

Of the 25 subjects who have been tested so far, some have fallen asleep or run screaming from the room. But many have "drowsed."

Dr. Cooper feels that people, when dealing with a constant flow of unchanging information, switch into what he calls an "automatic mode."

But to cope with the unusual—the blip on the radar screen or the boulder on the expressway—one must switch immediately into the "interactive mode."

The researchers are just beginning to look for ways to keep their subjects "involved with the environment." A motorist may do this by switching on the radio or, better still, talking to his passenger.

Train engineers in some parts of Germany, Dr. Cooper said, are required to punch a button regularly. If they don't, a klaxon goes off in their car. If this brings no response the train stops automatically.

A more subtle approach would be an alarm set off by a physical symptom such as change in eyelid droop or brain activity.

There may come a time when the long-distance truck driver first fastens his seat belt, then attaches electrodes to his scalp. These might be attached to a dashboard device to awaken him should he doze off.

The researchers have run out of friends and colleagues to experiment on, and now are offering work to unemployed men at the local employment exchange and a lunch of egg and french fried potatoes to spend a day taking psychological tests in the morning and being bored in the afternoon.

Dr. Cooper denies that the meal of egg and french fries is meant to increase the boredom factor.

One volunteer stayed alert in the black box, emerged quite cheerful, and told researchers he had been watching so much day-time television during his unemployment he had found the task simple.

Ocean Floor May Be Safe Nuclear Dumping Ground

By BAYARD WEBSTER
New York Times

NEW YORK — A group of marine scientists has determined that the ocean floor may be a safe place to dispose of the ever-growing quantities of toxic and long-lived radioactive nuclear wastes.

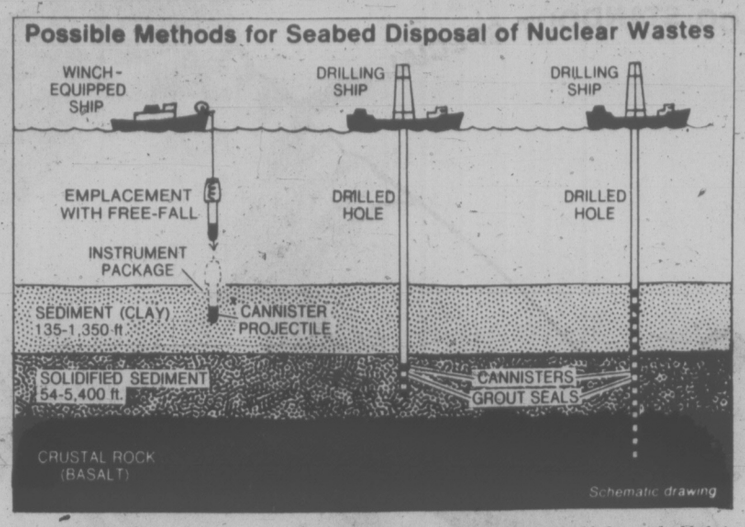
The group, working in the Seabed Emplacement Program principally funded by the Energy, Research and Development Administration, emphasized that this preliminary finding was based on laboratory tests using core samples of the sea floor. But they concluded from those tests that certain areas of the seabed could provide an undisturbed environment that would safely contain high-level nuclear wastes for up to a million years.

The researchers, who have been particiapting in the study since 1973, published their preliminary reports in the current issue of Oceanus, a journal of marine science published by the Woods Hold Oceanographic Institution at Woods Hole, Mass.

The group selected for research two sections of the Pacific Ocean Floor, one 600, the other 800 miles north of Hawaii. The sites are more or less evenly covered with clay-like sediment for depths of 200 feet or more. The areas from which the sample cores were taken are about 18,000 feet below the ocean surface and are known as mid-plate gyres.

They are in the middle of a tectoniq plate, a huge section of the earth's crust, far removed from the plate edges where volcanic activity or plate movement occur continually. In the mid-plate gyres, ocean currents are very slow-moving or barely perceptible.

The scientists said that objects could be embedded in such areas without fear of disturbance by water currents or surface upheaval. Core studies of the clay sediment showed that the environment has been undistrubed for hundreds of thousands of years and is likely to remain so.



In addition, the reports said, the clay's absorption properties would tend to inhibit the movement of radioactive material, and its plasticity would facilitate the emplacement of canisters and enable it to "heal" quickly if fractured or disturbed.

The scientists also felt that the clay layer would be preferable to other alternatives in the seabed, such as holes drilled into rock below the clay. This is because the layers beneath the clay are known to be subject to fracturing' seawater could flow through such fractures and carry heat and radioactivity in unpredictable distribution patterns.

The two Pacific sites from which the cores were obtained are not being proposed as sites for disposal, but are merely examples of many similar sites in the oceans of the world that might eventually serve such purposes.

The group's studies of seabed disposal methods are based on the projected state of technology for the waste form itself, container specifications and other factors to be specified in the next two years by ERDA, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Environmental Protection Agency.

At present, plans call for the conversion of high level radioactive wastes into a solid glass. This would be put into cannisters of corrosion-resistant metal approximately one foot in diameter by 10 feet long.

The problems posed by such waste material include high levels of radioactivity and slow rates of decay. Some of the waste elements, such as plutonium isotopes, have half-lives of hundreds of thousands of years.

Among the most troublesome wastes are cesium, strontium, neptunium, plutonium and maericum. Disposal methods must be found to prevent these and other waste elements from escaping up to a million years.

Another problem is the heat generated by a freshly filled cannister. This ranges from one to 10 kilowats, the equivalent of the heat given off by from 10 to 100 reading lamps. In the case of seabed disposal, a way would have to be found to prevent his heat from causing thermal currents that would modify the clay sediment.

Testing the seabed samples in the laboratory, the scientists found that the clay of the Pacific bed, similar to that found in many sections of the world's oceans, would provide a measure of safety equal to or better than that of terrestrial disposal sites, such as underground salt deposits and rock formations that are subject to earthquakes and shock fractures.

The methods for burial being explored include a free-fall system in which the canister and a monitoring instrument package, both attached to a shipborne winch, would be dropped overboard. The force of the fall would bury the bullet-shaped canister 90 to 120 feet in the clay.

Garbage Recovery Planned

TORONTO (CP) — The ministry of the environment soon will begin to process and analyse up to 300 tons of garbage a day at the only full-scale resource recovery plant of its kind in the world.

Ministry officials say the $13.5-million plant, which opened March 1, is the first stage of a 15-year project to find new ways to dispose of more than two million tons of garbage produced annually by the city. If successful, it will be a prototype for others across the province.

Ian McKerracher, the city's director of waste disposal, said in an interview that the city is committed to resource recovery because it is more acceptable than landfill and technology required is not new although its application to garbage is novel.

Toronto's landfill sites will be filled by 1982 and environmentalists oppose construction of more incinerators, despite stringent pollution controls.

McKerracher said the plant is equipped to handle paper, glass, metals, plastics, rubber and food wastes and some other materials, but not pathological, chemical or demolition wastes. It will be capable of handling up to 800 tons a day (about one-tenth the city's daily waste), reducing it to tiny particles for recycling or landfill.

Solid waste will be loaded on a conveyor belt where paper and plastic film will be separated by hand and shredded. A magnetic device will remove cans and other metals and air will be used to separate materials for processing and experimentation into units for composting, heat recovery, glass sorting and pyrolysis units.

Pyrolysis is similar to the process used in steel-plant coking ovens and produces a combustible gas which can replace natural gas or be used to produce an oil product. The process leaves a sand-like residue which could be used in road construction, McKerracher said.

Privincial and municipal authorities agree some landfill sites will always be needed for residues or waste which can not be processed, but environmental groups have opposed the sites because if they are provided municipalities might delay work on heat recovery and recycling plants.

Landfill also presents dangers of contamination in ground water and the escape of leachate and methane gas.

Rushing To Fires A Habit

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. Robert Ralph says he has heard so many fire bells in the last 30 years that he now rushes to fires purely out of habit.

Until his retirement in February, Ralph has been the doctor on call for the Toronto fire department since 1946, when there were 890 firemen

For all those years, he went right into the flames and smoke and worked alongside the firefighters in case he was needed.

A graduate of Toronto's Upper Canada College and Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., Ralph said he learned about the perils of fire as a major during the Second World War.

Since then, he has worked to keep injuries among Toronto's 1,400 firefighters well below average international levels.

Ralph said in an interview that during the last five years, the highest rate of injury in all industries has been among firemen.

Annual statistics compiled by the International Association of Firefighters show that one of every two firemen suffers serious injury. Ralph said in an interview. But the rate in Toronto is only one in four.

"It's just thanks to their efficiency," he said.

Toronto, for example, was the first fire department to use special techniques, such as electrocardiographs, on new recruits to detect possible heart ailments.

"Now the rates of heart conditions are the best in North America, tied with Detroit.

"Our heart deaths are less than two per cent."

MOST CANCER FUNDS GO INTO RESEARCH

Cancer research gets most of the money raised by the Canadian Cancer Society with fund-raising and administration taking only 13 per cent in B.C.

Wilf Burton, executive officer for the society's Vancouver Island branch, said he is worried about adverse publicity received recently by the American Cancer Society over administration costs.

One story suggested that 57 per cent of the American Cancer Society's money went to pay salaries, officers, staff and administration of that organization.

"I am in no position to comment on the A.C.S. program," Burton said, "but unfortunately the general public in Canada read and hear these things and relate it to their society, and this can be damaging to our cause."

In B.C. last year the society raised a total of $1,993,015 and the following is a breakdown on the use of funds, as audited by Gardner McDonald and Co. as of Sept. 30, 1976:

Under receipts, campaign collections were $1,231,367; in memoriams $264,753; bequests and legacies $335,048; interest of deposits and investments $116,704 and from fraternal orders $45,143 for the total of $1,993,015.

Research and fellowships received 69 per cent of the money; public education 10 per cent; patient financial aid eight per cent; administration six per cent; fund raising three per cent and the national office and for reserve four per cent.

"These percentages are to the nearest decimal point for explanatory purposes," Burton said, "and anyone wishing to obtain a copy of our 1976 audit may do so by contacting the society's offices in Victoria or Vancouver."

The provincial division of the society has also provided money to the TRIUMF project at UBC, which has a role in cancer treatment and has given grants to the Cancer Control Agency. It has helped buy much-needed hospital equipment and health centres.

Burton said the society has plans to build lodge accommodation for out-of-town cancer patients in both Victoria and Vancouver, for which a building fund has been long established.

Future Bleak for Burned-Out Indian

For the five-member Chuck Sampson family the future has never looked bleaker.

Last Tuesday they were living in relative comfort in their three-bedroom house on the Tsartlip Indian Reserve in Central Saanich. Although Sampson, 35, is unemployed and partially disabled because of a back injury, the family was able to get by on income they received from the federal government.

Today the family is sharing a cramped and crowded upstairs room in the home of a cousin on the reseve.

The family's problems erupted last Wednesday when fire gutted their home. All their clothes, personal belongings, furniture and $350 in savings were lost in the blaze.

The loss is not covered by insurance.

Sampson's mother, Mrs. Alice Sampson, said Tuesday aid is trickling in.

The Friendship Centre has donated some blankets, sheets, pillow cases and towels, she said. Two anonymous donors gave $35. And one man brought in some cothes including a pair of pants several sizes too big for Sampson to wear.

But it will probably take years — maybe never — for the family to return to its earlier relative prosperity.

Philip Paul, chief of the Tsartlip Band, said Sampson's predicament is typical of the way Indian people are discriminated against.

He said only a handful of the 60 families living on the reserve can afford insurance.

Because of lack of fire regulations and the fact many of the buildings on the reserve don't meet Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation standards, fire insurance premiums are beyond the reach of most residents.

"It's the story of the Indian people," he said. "We're run into the ground by the bureaucratic system."

The Bridge Expert

After the opening lead had been made and the dummy came into view, South recognized that an immediate trump finesse was the correct play. But after one and one-half tricks had been played, South properly "changed horses in midstream." The hand arose in a rubber-bridge game.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠.

Upon winning the opening lead with dummy's ace of spades, the question was whether to take the 50-50 trump finesse or whether, instead, to cash the ace, king and queen of diamonds. If the adversely held six diamonds were divided 3-3, then South could get rid of his losing spade on the third diamond. But even if the diamonds were divided 3-3 (a 36 per cent chance), South would still have a losing club to worry about. So he properly elected to take the trump finesse, hoping that East possessed the king.

But when he led dummy's queen of trumps at trick two, East discarded a club. Now South had no alternative but to go after diamonds. So he took the board's queen of trumps with his ace, after which he cashed the ace of diamonds. Next came South's remaining diamond, West following suit with the eight-spot.

South suddenly perceived that it would do him no good to play for the six missing diamonds to be divided 3-3. If they were so divided, he could discard his losing club on the fourth diamond (having discarded a spade on the third diamond), but West would ruff with a low trump. So South seized upon the only chance he had.

On the second diamond lead, South inserted dummy's ten, with the hope that West had been dealt four diamonds headed by the jack. As is evident, the ten won the trick. Next came the king of diamonds — and when East discarded a club, South breathed a sigh of relief as he tossed away his remaining spade. On the diamond queen South discarded his losing club. All the defenders could make from here in was West's king of trumps.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Nice plants, Dad," said Doug, helping his father get them out of the car. "I bet they cost plenty."

Fred smiled. "Not too much," he replied. "But at 6 cents each less, I'd have got one more for an extra penny, while at 7 cents each more I'd have saved a penny but got one less. They were all the same, of course."

How many did he buy?

Thanks to F. C. Asbury, Toronto.

Pansies Best in Heavy Soil

One sure sign of spring in garden shops across the country is the display of pansies with their appealing "face" markings.

Here in Victoria there are boxes of these popular plants already to be seen for sale, as well as the first blooms on last year's plants in the gardens.

Seed for early spring pansies is sown in late August and the plants wintered in a sheltered bed for transplanting to flowering places by late March. Or in a slightly heated greenhouse or porch, the seed can be sown by mid-January; these pricked-out seedlings will go into a coldrame for cool growing with overhead daylight to form first buds by the end of March.

The cool days of long daylight are the best time for pansy flowers. May and June sees them at their best. A good strain of large flowered pansies make a lovely picture in a half-shady bed, and their gentle perfume is a delight when they form part of the nearby planting for an outdoor living room.

Pansies grow best in a somewhat heavy soil, but it must be loaded with humus to retain moisture which in turn tends to keep the roots cool in summer, at the same time making soil nutrients constantly available.

If your garden soil contains much sand, add plentiful rotted leafmould, soil from the rotted compost heap, very old cow manure. Any of these, or all of them mixed with the sandy soil, will be successful.

Watering will be needed from about the end of April in average years here, for the month of May is often dry.

A clay soil needs the same mixture added, with a portion of rough sand. But it will be the humus material which breaks up the clay and allows air into it, at the same time it holds drops of moisture around the roots.

A necessary assist to the production of the large flowers promised by certain strains is prompt removal of fading flowers. Don't wait for seed pods to form; nip off the flowers as they begin rolling petals together.

As July days become warm, pansy flowers get much smaller. It will be noticed, too, that the branches have become quite long and straggling.

However, fresh green shoots will be found starting down in the centre of the plants. By cutting off the old branches, the new young growth will come along rapidly to produce more fine flowers by the cooler days of late summer and throughout fall.

A handful of the same humusy soil mixture as described earlier, tucked around the base of the plants and to cover the whole root area, will ensure fall beauty from your investment in spring pansies. Some of the plants may even survive the winter to bloom again, although with smaller flowers.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD
CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale, start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for you daily. Monday through Saturday call. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

U.S. Plans Tighter Ship Rules

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House today outlined a presidential plan for "strong administrative actions," including tighter shipping standards, to reduce the risk of oil spills in U.S. waters and compensate spill victims for their losses.

Press secretary Jody Powell said one step under consideration is a ban to keep all tankers "with a history of accidents and problems" from entering American waters.

President Carter's program, to be spelled out in detail Friday, also calls for reorganizing federal oil pollution programs "to make them simpler and more responsive," according to a White House fact sheet.

The White House said Carter is considering a series of potential federal actions including:

—Establishing new standards through the department of transportation for all tankers, foreign and domestic, entering U.S. ports.

—Submission to Congress of oil spill liability and compensation legislation.

—Creation of a U.S. marine safety information system to identify tankers with long histories of poor maintenance, accidents and pollution violations.

"The rash of oil tanker accidents which occurred this winter off our east and west coasts has brought home to us the serious risks which are involved in marine transportation of oil," the fact sheet said.

In Ottawa, an environment department international marine expert said Canadian regulations governing operating conditions on ships entering Canadian waters are "far in advance" of comparable U.S. laws.

Mary Walsh told the Commons' environment committee that if the government followed calls to make its regulations the same as U.S. ones, it would have to lower existing standards in many cases.

But Larry Edgeworth, head of the environmental protection service, said that the government must continue to press for better prevention of spills from oil tankers.

Progressive Conservative MPs pushed for better inspection of all vessels entering Canadian waters.

John Klenavic, acting director of the environmental emergency branch, said that ships can be boarded and inspected if they are bound for Canadian ports.

But as 150,000 ships enter and leave those ports annually, the department can only do in-port inspections because of limited manpower.

And pleas from B.C. Liberal MP Jack Pearsall for modern maps to replace the 50-year-old ones of Douglas Channel — which will be followed by Kitimat-bound tankers were met by environment department excuses that there are insufficient funds to make new maps.

Larry Edgeworth, head of the environmental protection service, said the department's hydrographers would like to prepare modern maps but no funds are available for such a project.

Pearsall, who along with fellow Liberal Art Lee (Vancouver East) is against the proposed pipeline to Edmonton from Kitimat said the transport of defence departments must have modern maps.

He was "shocked and dismayed" when told of the 1927 date for the making of some of the maps.

Coastal residents know that waterways had changed considerably since the maps were made and yet Kitimat Pipe Line Ltd. used them in its application to the National Energy Board.

A fishermen's group has found that a series of shoals in the proposed tanker routes have not even been mentioned in the company submission. The shoals could take the bottoms off most tankers.

A department official said the company's environmental assessment is deficient in several ways, which the government will soon be outlining.

Germs Checked At White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Army said Tuesday it tested the White House ventilation system in 1962 to determine whether it was vulnerable to germ or chemical attack.

A terse statement said: "At the request of the White House staff, the army in 1962 tested the air-intake system of a portion of the White House."

Army officials refused to say what substances were used in the White House test, what conclusions were reached, or what corrective measures, if any, were taken. They indicated that present White House officials would not let them say more.

The statement was provided in response to questions about allegations that the army conducted simulated biological warfare attacks on the White House, capitol, and one federal office building. Those allegations arose after the army made public last week a sensitive report on its biological warfare programs. That report said the army conducted at least 239 open air tests in the United States between 1949 and 1960.

The White House test was not listed among the 239 incidents in the censored report.

But the army said it did conduct a vulnerability test of the food and drug administration's water system in 1969, at the request of the General Services Administration, which operates federal buildings.

Army officials said the test at FDA involved a coliphage, which they described as an organism that attacks viruses. They said the coliphage "presents no danger to men or animals."

Did Gov't Break Law On Litter?

They will be asked to rule on whether the government should be taken to court.

Saanich's public works committee Tuesday asked the police board to decide if a government truck violated the Streets and Traffic Bylaw which imposes penalties for littering Saanich streets.

The incident was reported by Lou Watters of Sooke.

In a report, he told the committee, "at 12:45 p.m. Jan. 18, 1977, I followed a green one-ton provincial government truck, licence number 57-60CK north for several miles on Douglas Street leading to Royal Oak Drive. This vehicle had an open back with high sides and I witnessed for several miles the escape of paper and general debris from the back of this truck until I left it at approximately the Royal Oak Drive turnoff . . ."

Ald. John Mika moved the matter be reviewed by the board and action be initiated if warranted. Only Ald. David Paterson was against such a move, stating a warning might be in order.

Miles Primrose, John Pendray and Geoffrey Vantreight are provincial appointees on the board, which is chaired by Mayor Ed Lum. The other member is Saanich appointee John B. Tribe.

Solar Prospects Bright in U.K.

LONDON (CP) — Prospects for exploiting the sun in Britain are brighter than many people imagine, says Science correspondent Roy Herbert commenting on the four-year program of research and development of solar energy to be carried out in this country.

Herbert wrote in a recent report that "by the end of this century solar energy could be making a significant contribution to Britain's power requirements—about two per cent.

"In spite of Britain's dismal reputation for weather it gets lots of sun," said Herbert. "Few places in the world receive more than twice its solar input."

He said the trouble with exploiting it is that it is spread over a large area, it varies widely from place to place and season to season.

"As Britain is highly populated, there is not a lot of space that could be used for solar energy collectors," he added. "For these reasons and others, such as methods for extracting power from solar energy, exploitation will be slow."

He said the case for exploiting energy "is a strong one.

"It would be a secure source and one that fitted with present trends in environmental ideas," he said. "It would release other fuels for other jobs while being capable of making fuel itself. And it would be a renewable source, not affected by world events and one that could be handled more effectively as time went on."

The report compiled by Herbert for the department of energy technological support unit discusses the main methods of exploiting solar energy.

These include collecting it as heat, converting it into electricity via silicon cells and using plants, algae and bacteria to produce materials to burn and to form the raw materials for chemical processes for oil, gas and alcohol extraction.

It says that solar heat collectors are commercially available and already are being used to heat water and space in buildings.

"A lot can be learned particularly on storage techniques" and the report recommends research into solar panels, corrosion problems and greater monitoring of experimental houses.

JOBLESS 'CRISIS' HIT

Macdonald Must Go: Opposition

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — An angry opposition Tuesday described statistics showing that there are more than 900,000 Canadians unemployed as a "crisis of catastrophic and disastrous proportions" and demanded the resignation of Finance Minister Donald Macdonald.

With Prime Minister Trudeau absent from the tempestuous Commons for the second consecutive day the combined opposition's attack was levelled at Macdonald.

He has said he will being in his budget March 31.

It is a budget which opposition financial critics now say "must" contain major cuts in personal income taxes to try to stop the jobless lebel topping the one million mark.

Manpower Minister Bud Cullen, also facing a hostile opposition in the Commons, added there is "no reason to react in panic" to high jobless figures.

The government had predicted worsening unemployment last year, he said, and has already announced make-work programs.

Derek Backburn (NDP — Brant) said that if Macdonald did not bring in substantial personal income-tax cuts and new make-work measures, the minister should resign.

Macdonald said he wuld make any new announcements in his budget but added the government would give attention to the work force.

Conservative Leader Joe Clark, who called Macdonald the architect of a policy which had created the worst unemployment in history, said in the Commons a fight against jobless totals should be the prime target of the budget.

Outside the House, Clark said the government should have had a budget earlier because it would take another six months for economic policies to bring results.

Short-term measures would be needed, he added.

David Orlikow (NDP-Winnipeg North) called for an emergency debate in the Commons but his motion was turned down.

Broadbent said if the hidden unemployed — persons not counted in the Statistics Canada survey or who have given up the search for work — were included, there would be 1.5 million unemployed.

Both parties called for personal tax cuts to stimulate the

22% Quebecers Favor Split Poll Finds

MONTREAL (CP) — A public opinion poll published today indicates that 22 per cent of Quebecers favor Quebec independence, double the percentage favoring independence in a similar poll taken in 1968 shortly after the Parti Quebecois' founding convention.

The poll was conducted in early February by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion.

BCAA WARNS MEXICAN CAR TRAVEL UNSAFE

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Automobile Association has warned its 254,000 members that travelling by vehicle in Mexico is extremely dangerous and reports of violence there are increasing steadily.

"It's a bad situation," Bill McKinley, BCAA president, said Tuesday. "Tourists are beginning to stay away in droves because of the unfair treatment they are receiving.

"If you have an accident they throw you in jail whether it's your fault or not," he said. "It all depends on the local police. Unless you come up with $2,000 or $3,000 you'll likely spend a fair amount of time in jail."

McKinley said there is little the BCAA, the American Automobile Association or any Canadian agency can do to assist motorists when trouble occurs.

"The association has been growing increasingly concerned not only at the attacks on tourists on some lonely stretches of Mexican highway but the increasing number of complaints from members of harassment by police, vehicle confiscation and the corruption of some officials," McKinley said.

While several stories cannot be fully substantiated, the few members that have been able to detail their experiences have caused the BCAA to seek assistance from the Canadian Automobile Association and the AAA, he said.

Mexican authorities have agreed to set up programs suggested by the AAA to improve travelers' safety and comfort, he said.

"Like BCAA, the AAA has been receiving intensified reports of 'hostile' treatment of some motorists, while travel in the Mexican state of Sinaloa now involves substantial risk," McKinley said.

He said that although representation made to the president of Mexico by the AAA had resulted in a large number of Mexican troops being brought into the state to control bandits, motorists were still urged to avoid the west coast Highway 15 south of Mazatlan. Several murders and robberies have occurred in the area.

McKinley said one BCAA member involved in a vehicle accident in Mexico, who was completely blameless, found herself charged with a serious driving offence because she had not had the foresight to bribe the local official as the other driver had done.

Police Shoot-Out Ends 2-Day Hijack

Times News Services

ZURICH — An Italian hijacker who took a Spanish airliner on a 7,500 mile journey across two continents in search of his young daughters was captured today in a shootout with Swiss police. All 22 hostages scrambled off the plane to safety.

The police, wearing bullet-proof vests under pilots' uniforms, boarded the Iberian Airlines Boeing 727 during an exchange of crews and — with guns firing — rushed Luciano Porcari after he began shooting.

One policeman was wounded in the leg.

The 14 remaining passengers, who accompanied the gunman on stopovers in seven cities in Europe and Africa in his bizarre 43-hour journey, rushed off the plane during the shootout.

Police said Porcari managed to grab his Winchester rifle and fire one shot, slightly wounding the one policeman. No one else was hurt, the police said.

"Holy Mother of God, it's finished," said Porcari's estranged wife in Turin, Italy, when she heard it was over. The wife, Isabella Zavoli, had refused to surrender the couple's five-year-old daughter to Porcari, one of his demands during the hijacking.

Police said Porcari, a 36-year-old auto mechanic, was being held in investigative custody pending a decision whether he should be tried in Switzerland. Spain is expected to seek his extradition.

The spokesman said one passenger, obviously watched by the hijacker, searched the boarding agents but let the first one pass. The second policeman was entering when gunfire broke out.

"Suddenly, passengers began rushing down the stairs as shooting began between Porcari and the two agents, whose bullet-proof vests had apparently been detected."

An armored truck sped to the aircraft and uniformed police rushed aboard and overpowered the hijacker.

"All the passengers and crew managed to leave the aircraft and get to a safe distance without any of them being hurt," a police spokesman said.

He said Porcari, 37, armed with a rifle and pistol, had ordered the crew exchange after the jetliner made an emergency landing at Zurich on a flight from Poland to Italy because a passenger reportedly had suffered a heart attack.

An eight-acre parcel of land near Chilliwack recently excluded from the agricultural land reserve is owned by the same man who provided Chilliwack Socred MLA Harvey Schroeder with a free constituency office.

The B.C. Land Commission and the regional district had recommended earlier the land remain in the reserve, but a cabinet committee ruled last week it could be removed for use as a car dealership lot.

Schroeder himself made representation to the committe, supporting the application by Douglas Brett to have the land removed.

The question of Schroeder's office, and a meeting held there between Environment Minister Jim Nielsen and a Save the Farmland group from Chilliwack, was brought up Tuesday during question period in the legislature by NDP MLA Bob Skelly (Alberni).

Schroeder said there was no connection between Brett's application to the cabinet committee and his constituency office.

Neilsen said the issue was "much ado about nothing."

Schroeder said that although he paid no rent for the office used by his constituency and owned by Brett, he did have to provide about $1,800 or $2,000 worth of renovations before it was usable.

It was given to the constituency association by Brett on the understanding those renovations would be made, he said.

His association used the office for a year, but vacated it last fall, before Brett's application was made for removal from the land reserve.

Schroeder said he sup-

Young Man Killed On Malahat

A single car accident on the Malahat early today claimed the life of an 18-year-old youth, the tenth person to die in traffic mishaps in Greater Victoria this year.

Peter John DeHaan, of 240 Simcoe, was pronounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital at 2:45 a.m., about 75 minutes after the accident.

Colwood RCMP said DeHaan was in a northbound car that went out of control near the Malahat Chalet, smashed into a telephone booth, hit a power pole and came to rest against a tree.

Both DeHaan and a 29-year-old woman riding in the car were thrown from the vehicle.

The woman, whose name has not been released pending notification of next of kin, is in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with head and internal injuries.

Police are unable to say which of the two was the driver of the car.

Beirut Leader Gunned

BEIRUT (AP) — Kamal Jumblatt, leader of the leftist Lebanese Moslem-Palestinian alliance in Lebanon's civil war, was killed in a machine-gun ambush today, police reported.

The 59-year-old Socialist leader, target of several assassination attempts in the past, was killed while riding in his car in the mountain town of Baakline, about 21 miles outh-east of here, police said.

Two Jumblatt aides were also killed in the ambush, police said, and a hunt for the unidentified assassins is under way.

Sources in Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist party said that at the time of the assassination Jamblatt was touring the Chouf region — heartland of the Moslem Druse sect which he led.

The ambush site was near the Christian village of Deir el Kamar, home town of Jumblatt's political archenemy, the former Christian president of Lebanan, Camille Chamoun.

Jumblatt was a millionaire landlord espousing a leftist reform program, a poet and a mystic with a masterly command of power politics. He won the 1972 Lenin Peace Prize.

The assassination of Jumblatt might threaten an already fragile peace established last November when Syria's military intervention ended the civil war which began 19 months before.

DON'T THEY DESERVE OCCASIONAL FUN?

Do healthy, able-bodied Victorians really believe that the handicapped don't reserve to have any fun, any pleasure, any enjoyment in their lives?

Do they believe that a modicum of food, shelter and perhaps some rehabilitative or other treatment is plenty good enough for those who have mental or physical handicaps which make it difficult for them to live "out in the world" lives?

The Victoria Times and CJVI-900 hope that there are many Victoria readers and listeners out there who don't think this way. That's why they have joined to support a small, struggling local group which certainly does believe strongly that the handicapped deserve a happy life, as near to what most people consider a normal life as can be attained.

Don't turn away from this appeal. It is important to human dignity — your human dignity, as well as that of the handicapped. Please turn to page 17 and learn more about this remarkable project.

THE NOMINEES

Eleanor Hendriks Witmer
Copyright 1977 Toronto Sun Syndicate

Best Actor nominee Sylvester Stallone (Rocky) is a man of many talents and great perserverance. Stallone is not only the star of Rocky, which is itself nominated for Best Picture, but he also wrote the script which is nominated for Best Screenplay.

Finding himself at loose ends after graduating from the University of Miami in 1969 Stallone recalled that he had enjoyed acting in a school production of Death Of A Salesman and consequently decided to try an acting career in New York. Unable to land a job as an actor Stallone turned to writing while working part time as an usher at the Walter Reade Theatre. He was reasonably successful and sold several television scripts. He also wrote most of the script for a film entitled Lords Of Flatbush in which he also had a leading role. At this time Sylvester decided to go to Hollywood. Prior to his starring role in Rocky he appeared in Capone and Death Race 2000.

His insistance that he star in the film rather than bring in an established star who would guarantee the producers a hit at the box office has paid off for Stallone both as a writer and as an actor. Whether it will pay off with an Academy Award remains to be seen.

Priority Promised for Seat Belt Law

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Mandatory seatbelt legislation was reintroduced in the B.C. legislature Tuesday with a promise that it has priority this session.

Transport and Communications Minister Jack Davis said he hoped that by mid or late summer B.C. drivers and passengers will have to buckle up or face fines up to $500.

The legislation was first introduced at last spring's session, but was never debated.

The legislation, the Motor Vehicle Amendment Act, requires drivers and passengers, including all children except those under the age of six, to wear seat belts when the car is in motion.

There are several exceptions:

—A doctor can sign a form saying a person cannot wear a seatbelt for either medical reasons or because the person is too large or has some other physical handicap.

—When the car is in reverse, seatbelts are unnecessary.

—Anyone who has to get in or out of a vehicle frequently, such as a bread of milk delivery person, and whose vehicle does not go faster than 25 miles per hour when in operation, need not wear seatbelts.

The legislation is similar to that introduced in Ontario in January, 1976, where there has been a 16 per cent reduction in accident injuries over the year.

Davis said if B.C. shows a comparable reduction, as a result of the mandatory seatbelt legislation, last year the province would have had 3,800 fewer injured people.

"It is estimated that the prevention of death and injuries together would also have eliminted a demand in the order of 43,608 bed days in our hospitals," Davis said.

A report from the B.C. Road Safety Co-ordinating Council has shown that the dollar savings this year resulting from an increase in seatbelt usage from 20 per cent to 50 per cent could save the province $12.3 million in direct medical and hospital costs alone.

"Nor does that take into account the loss of productive talent, especially that of our young people to society ... pain, suffering, bereavement," Davis said.

The government does not intend that the law be "policed rigorously," Davis said, but motorists picked up for other driving offences like speeding would be checked.

Signs will be put up at B.C. borders, Davies said, telling tourists that seatbelts are mandatory.

Although the legislation provides for a $500 fine, or a suspended entence or a three-month jail terms, the average will be much lower, the minister said.

'Great Thrill' Felt With Handicapped

Times Staff

One of the programs on which she works with fellow employees David Worthy and Peter Menzies, as well as volunteers Marlene Andrews and Gary Townsend, involves taking 20 mentally retarded adults from the Langwood workshop on the type of excursions most of us take for granted.

Most of the time members of the group are restricted to the workshop or life in Glendale hospital, home or a group home.

But every second Wednesday the group gets an immersion into the life of the community at large.

"They walked into a dark room. There was this errie music and celestial scene that produced a lot of fear. A lot of them had never been to a show before," Baker recalled. "But in a couple of minutes everything was fine. Being able to show something to someone for the first time is a kind of a great thrill."

★

As Worthy puts it, "They intimidate me. They swim away like crazy."

Baker is convinced the programs to bring the handicapped face to face with the rest of society are slowly changing the attiude of the public.

"I can really see a lot of changes in the public," she said. "It takes just a little patience for people to realize we all feel the same inside. We all have the desire for social and physical recreation."

Before the centre began operating, Baker said it was unusual to see people in wheelchairs shopping in department stores.

Now it's become part of their life for those who use the centre's facilities.

The community presence of the handicapped, Baker says, will gradually change the public attitude toward them, allowing the handicapped to be considered and consulted in the events of everyday living.

"The whole point is to make the public aware. I think that's coming. That's what we're working toward. When that comes we won't have to exist."

The Times, in co-operation with CJVI, is sponsoring a campaign to raise operating funds for the society.

Government grants, which have provided most of the funding are running out, and the work done by Baker and other workers is in jeopardy.

Cracks Show In Peninsula Water Link

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

The veneer of co-operation between Saanich Peninsula municipalities over water supply showed a few patches Tuesday as their new water commission struggled with a variety of problems.

Out of 2½ hours of talk came the impression that the water supply system for Central Saanich, Sidney and North Saanich may be merged on paper but on the ground each continues to run its own show.

Sidney is suspicious that Central Saanich is overcharging for water it is pumping from Elk Lake. And given cheaper water rates in Central Saanich, commission members are wondering what that municipality is going to do to encourage water conservation this summer when a shortage is anticipated.

The commission, with three regional board members on it and representation from all peninsula councils and water boards, came into being at the first of the year to deal with the chronic summer water shortage and past fragmented water system.

Within a couple of years it will have produced a long-term solution by building a major water line up the peninsula. That line will bring water from the Sooke watershed, the same source which supplies the core municipalities through the Greater Victoria Water District system.

Meanwhile, there are merging pains and one of them is that the new commission is responsible solely for bulk water supply. Distribution is the responsibility of each of the three municipalities.

The commission's operating budget of $188,225 for this year has yet to be cleared through the regional board and by the provincial government and doesn't provide for taking over key pumping operations, members were told.

Even so, members voted to take over the Elk Lake pumping station operated by Central Saanich as soon as a temporary line has been installed later this spring, linking it with the GVWD system which has reached the south end of Beaver-Elk Lake.

That line will be laid on the surface and will be a 12-inch platic pipe following the old Victoria and Sidney Railway right-of-way up the west side of the lakes.

It will cost about $125,000, but aboout half of that can be recover3d when it is taken up and sold in a couple of years.

In the end, regional co-operation was reaffirmed when regional directors, Jerry Tregaskis, George Westwood and Dave Hill, for Sidney, North Saanich and Central Saanich, won commission support for a common newsletter to be sent to all residents preaching water conservation this summer.

Scaling of water rates to encourage it will be studied by individual municipalities.

Masked Men Face Charges

Saanich police have laid a conspiracy charge after the arrest Tuesday of two masked men and the seizure of a sawed-off shotgun.

Police today refused to give details on how the pair were apprehended in advance of the event.

The two men were surprised by four officers who found them sitting in a car parked near Coppens Jewellery Ltd. in the Shelbourne Plaza.

Police said the men, who face a series of charges, had the hoods of their jackets over their heads and were wearing silk stocking masks.

The two were taken into custody without struggle.

Stewart said the gun, stockings and some gloves were seized.

Police have charged the pair with possession of a prohibited weapon and conspiracy to commit armed robbery.

A third charge, possession of a weapon for the purpose of committing an indictable offence, is pending, Stewart added.

The two possession charges carry a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment while the conspiracy charge carries a maximum penalty of life.

Gov't 'Exploits' Jobless Ranks

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Victoria Labor Council president John Schibli today accused the federal government of being callously indifferent to the country's unemployment problem in order to crate a climate favoring withdrawal of Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

Schibli predicted the government will do nothing to alleviate the nation's chronic unemployment until after AIB guidelines have been lifted, because in a period of high unemployment, unions are more likely to settle for less.

"In times of severe unemployment unions are intimidated into accepting lesser agreements," he said. "In the construction industry, for example, people have been on unemployment for a long time and we're obviously going to find it difficult to convince people that they should go out on strike."

SCHIBLI
. . . tough time ahead

Schibli said that with controls about to be lifted, "I can easily see that the government is not going to be too damn anxious to offer any major programs to alleviate massive unemployment."

He said in the current climate, workers look at the number of unemployed and feel lucky to have a job, any job, and any kind of a paycheque.

"There's no doubt the government's callously exploiting the present situation," he said. "It's a typical management attitude."

Responding to statements made early this week by AIB vice president June Menzies, urging companies to be prepared to endure long strikes after the guidelines have been removed, Schibli said: "Really what she's saying is that the government must continue this severe unemployment during the de-control period — in other words, keep the people hungry and they won't be screaming for increases."

Menzies said Monday in Victoria that companies have been leaning on the AIB as an excuse for not giving big wage settlements, but after the guidelines are gone they'll have to stand on their own.

She urged companies not to give in, "otherwise all that has been gained during the three years will be lost."

Schibli said he is not surprised by the position the government has taken because, "of course we're used to that — we don't expect a helluva lot from them, except six months before an election, and by then it's to bloody late."

Schibli predicted the de-control period will be a tough time for the trade union movement right across the country.

"There's already a lot of concern about future confrontations," he said. "It's the membership that decides whether to strike or not, and right now people are worried about working."

The government is committed to end the controls program next year and is now actively debating a schedule for the phase-out.

Unique is the word for it.

Because of a community spirit that is unique in its strength, the people of Sooke will soon have a museum in an unique building. And the whole thing is going to make people in many other rural areas rather envious.

For nostalgia is in vogue right now. The good old days, back when . . . and all that. And most country districts would dearly love to have a building that could house the relics (artifacts not the old-timers, that is!) of bygone days so today's children might learn and understand what it took to make a community as it is now.

But hard work — and it takes a lot of it to pull off such a project — is not quite so much in vogue.

"We notice that with other Lions Clubs they often have to hire people to get a job done," Tuck explains. "But we can always get volunteer help here."

It was the Lions Club in fact, back in 1974 under then-president John Wilson, that got the museum project started. The Lions called a meeting of all local groups and the Sooke Region Historical Society was born.

★

And then the community started moving.

Today, if you drive out from Victoria, just over the bridge on the corner of the road you go down each summer to All Sooke Day, you'll find a splendid building nearing completion. Fully in keeping with the logging history of the area, it is constructed with logs in the stockade fashion and boasts a heavy shake roof.

The logs — 6,000 feet of them worth more than $14,000 — were donated by logging companies. And 90 per cent of all the timber used for finishing work in the 30- by 50-foot, two-storey building was given to the society by local mills.

"The companies have been really good but so have the people," says Historical Society archivist Elida Peers.

Something like 4,000 man-hours (sorry, person-hours) have gone into the building so far and most of that time has been donated by residents who have gone out to Lions' weekend work parties. As well, many people have given the society old tools and other interesting things they've had lying around their property. Jean Robinson, who is in charge of cataloguing artifacts, has 200 listed already. But there are countless other ways people have helped.

The catchy logging truck insignia for the society's stationery and scrap books was drawn by the Sooke fire chief Lorne Fisk and the printing was done free by a local firm. The museum building itself was designed by Lion Cliff Beange with modifications by foreman Peter Tymchuk.

"This is the way the whole thing has gone," says Elida Peers, "and if it hadn't, we wouldn't be anywhere."

"We got an awful lot of community involvement when we were peeling the logs," explains Tuck Vowles. "And that's tough work. But ironically, once we were successful in getting an LIP grant of $29,500 to help pay for the construction (the society has hired a few young workers), people sort of left us to it."

Still, the building, already creating quite an impression on passing motorists, will be ready for the tentative opening date of July 2. Three main model projects — oldtimer Bill Baker's replica of the kind of fish traps used on the coast from Becher Bay to Jordan River between 1904 and 1959, an Indian exhibit and a display of both early and contemporary logging — won't be in the museum by then.

"It won't be a perfected museum at that stage," says Mrs. Peers. "We'll simply open and have some artifacts and a few souvenirs for the tourists to help pay for maintenance. It will be some years before we're good."

Funny enough, at first the building won't open as a museum — but as a dancehall!

"That's right," Mrs. Peers admits with a grin. "We're having a barbecue and dance here on June 11 as a fund-raising project. And that's when the Lions will officially turn the building over to the Historical Society."

Loud Blast Rocks Area

A loud explosion rocked the Shelbourne-Feltham area Tuesday night but Saanich police have been unable to determine the cause.

A Saanich police spokesman said there were several calls about the blast, first reported at 10:18 p.m.

Begging on Victoria Street 'Initiative' Says Vander Zalm

The opposition in legislature Tuesday turned an off-the-cuff remark by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm into the basis for a non-confidence motion.

WALLACE
. . . outraged

During debate on Vander Zalm's budgetary estimates, Barbara Wallace (NDP—Cowichan-Malahat) said she had seen a beggar on a Victoria street earlier in the day and that he was playing a harmonica for money.

"That's initiative," said Vander Zalm in across-the-floor banter.

Wallace immediately expressed outrage at the remark and, following a two-hour adjournment, NDP human resources critic Rosemary Brown introduced the motion of non-confidence.

The motion was to reduce Vander Zalm's annual salary by $1.

"Does he have any shame, sense of guilt, any concern for the fact that in this . . . city, there are people on the street begging?" she asked.

"Beggars are people with initiative," said Brown mockingly. "What does that say about a government that forces a person to beg?"

She said that the underprivileged in B.C. are subject to "the shuffle, the mystery of inscrutable paperwork" when attempting to deal with the Social Credit government.

"It is a shame we have beggars, but it is disgraceful we have a minister who refers to begging as a sign of initiative," Brown said.

Vander Zalm said he thought it was "wrong to refer to that particulart person as a beggar."

"I frankly believe that person may be doing his thing," he said, adding he thought Wallace's description was an insult and he'd go out and apologize on her behalf.

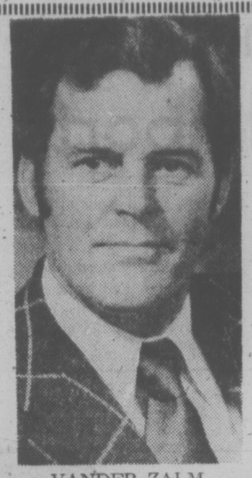
A series of NDP MLAs then rose to chastise Vander Zalm for his remark and for the manner in which he has handled his ministry.

Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) said the remark was an indication of a return to the attitude prevalent at the turn of the century when initiative was backed at any cost.

"Are we going back to the days of abuse of our fellow man?" Cocke asked, adding that Vander Zalm's remark "capsulizes everything this minister of human resources stands for."

Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) accused Vander Zalm of acting like former United States senator Joe McCarthy, who conducted an anti-Communist campaign in the early 1950s.

Lea said the minister's prime concern was to "get lots of publicity" and not the welfare of the needy in the province.



VANDER ZALM

'Overdrugging' Monitored

There were about 100 bottles and Vander Zalm told the legislature they had all been prescribed for one Vancouver woman over three months.

In fact, he said, 1,200 pills were prescribed for the woman over a period of six weeks and many of the prescriptions were given only a day or two apart.

The woman, the minister said, died of an overdose of drugs. Her family, clearing out her suite in Vancouver, found the cache of pills and turned them over to the government as an example of what can happen.

Evidence like this is terribly upsetting," he said.

Instances of "overdrugged" patients show up particularly in nursing homes, but under a drug-monitoring program in effect since July, the usage of prescription drugs in nursing homes has been reduced in some cases by as much as 50 per cent.

The monitoring program, Vander Zalm said, is now in effect in about one-third of all institutions such as nursing and extended care homes governed by the provincial government, and should be in effect in all such homes sometime this summer.

Under the program, pharmacists must keep a list of all drugs prescribed under a patitnt's name to prevent duplication of prescriptions and overuse of drugs.

One nursing home, the minister said, is trying to get away from the use of drugs by providing sherry to the patients as a relaxant and has found it effective.

"They found the residents conapletely happy," he said.

PREMIER STALKED BY VANDER ZALM?

Premier Bill Bennett was warned by opposition members Tuesday to "Beware the Ides of March" and to watch out for "Brutus Vander Zalm" who has designs on the premier's job.

"The premier should beware the Ides of March (March 15)," NDP MLA Barbara Wallace (Cowichan-Malahat) warned.

"This minister (Vander Zalm) is like no other," she said, speaking during debate on the spending estimates of Vander Zalm's office.

"He is very interested in moving into the position of premier."

Hebenton Part of Cougar Sale Deal

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Only the formality of signing remains, but it would appear that Victoria Cougars are about to fall into the hands of new owners.

Regardless of when the signing takes place, Pat Ginnell, the present owner-manager-coach of the Western Canada Hockey League team, will remain as coach for the rest of this season.

Lorne Williams, heading a Vancouver group that has been negotiating for purchase of the Cougars, was quoted Tuesday in Vancouver as saying a deal has almost been completed and the new owners would take control at the end of the season.

Williams met with Ginnell on Monday.

Ginnell admitted there "is some truth" to Willliams' statement. Ginnell, who left Flin Flon Bombers to take over control of the Cougars in December, 1973, said "several matters" still must be resolved. He didn't go into details.

It has been learned, however, that most of the "matters" are of a minor nature. But for the signatures on the ownership papers, the sale is going through and the actual signing could take place within days.

Depending on the whims of Williams and/or Ginnell, the announcement may be delayed until the end of the season.

Two of the biggest problems involving transfership have been settled. Williams has insisted on buying a debt-free club. But, while the Cougars are running below last season's figures, that didn't appear a major problem for Ginnell.

Another problem involves Paul LaPointe, father of former Cougar defenceman Rick Lapointe, now playing with Philadelphia Flyers of the National League. LaPointe owns 17 per cent, and has steadfastly refused to sell his share to Ginnell.

The Williams' group, while willing to accept LaPointe as a shareholder, wants the "debt-free" request to include the minority stockholder. Settlement on that point, apparently, also has been reached.

Williams is so sure of purchasing the Cougars that he has already contacted his "first choice" to succeed Ginnell as coach:

Andy Hebenton.

A popular performer with the old professional Cougars, Hebenton now coaches Tulsa in the professional Central League. Hebenton, it is further learned, has indicated he would be happy to return to Victoria.

Williams and Hebenton both played minor and junior hockey together in Winnipeg.

Finally, there is one other indication that the sale is almost a certainty. Bob Briscoe, associated with the Cougars when they were owned by the Eric Bishop-headed syndicate, will return to Victoria.

Briscoe, who scouted and worked in the business office, is expected to return as Victoria's business manager. A former sportswriter who returned to his old profession with the Sun, Briscoe already has tendered his resignation to the Vancouver paper.

Briscoe also has resigned as B.C. scout for Lethbridge Broncos of the WCHL.

The one thing that can't be ascertained is Ginnell's direction. He has admitted he has "places to go" but no one, as yet, knows where that will be.

It has been rumored that Ginnell will return to Flin Flon. He also is considered a candidate for the manager-coach position with Calgary Centennials. Seattle and Edmonton, both without franchises, also have been reported in his WCHL plans.

Monarchs Take Dull Show

By ERNIE FEDORUK

They drew one on Tuesday and coach Pat Ginnell figures Victoria Cougars are due for more surprises if his players continue to perform as they did in a 3-1 loss to Winnipeg Monarchs.

"It was almost as if they're waiting for the playoffs," was Ginnell's biting comment after the Western Canada Hockey League engagement at Memorial Arena. "If that's going to be their attitude, they may get a surprise.

While the Cougars are assured of a playoff position, Ginnell has been looking for the team to move out of fourth place in the Western Division. The possibility exists but Tuesday's unexpected setback hurt the chances.

Victoria has six games remaining, including three with Kamloops Chiefs, whom Cougars trail by four points. Kamloops has a game in hand.

The Cougars did not play well. Monarchs, on the other hand, provided an excellent lesson in skating, passing and checking.

Only goaltender Murray Bannerman and, on occasion, Archie Henderson tried to instill some spitit and effort into the Cougars' play. The others didn't get the message.

Victoria's passing was particularly pathetic. The usually-dependable Geordie Robertson and Curt Fraser (playing on a line with Henderson) performed as if they had not been introduced. Gregg Anderson, Paul Enquist and Gary Lupul also had problems. Ditto the defence, which invariably waited until the forwards were covered before moving the puck up the ice.

Steele played a prominent role in Winnipeg's victory. He made 32 stops and was most effective in the first two periods.

Steele also had help from goalposts. John Gordon, Henderson and Lupul all hit the pipes in the first period.

In addition, Bill Jobson, Brent Gogol, Robertson (twice), Enquist and Glen Cochrane failed to connect on other excellent scoring chances over the first two periods.

Cougars played without centre Dennis Fenske and Kevin Clackson, both hobbled with injuries.

In Tuesday's only other game, Bill Derlago scored his 88th and 89th goals to move to within one of the league record established by Ron Chipperfield as Brandon Wheat Kings defeated Regina Pats 5-2.

The win also assured Brandon of finishing with the most points in the over-all standings.

Wings Fire Delvecchio; Put Lindsay in GM Post

Times News Services

Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League fired general manager Alex Delvecchio today and replaced him with Ted Linsday, a former Red Wings' great.

The shakeup followed a 7-1 defeat at the hands of Vancouver Canucks in Vancouver, Tuesday night. It was the ninth straight winless game for the Wings who are mired deep in the cellar of the Norris Division of the NHL and have only 41 points, the lowest total in the entire league.

Lindsay inherits a tough job with the Wings who are wrapping up their seventh consecutive season out of the playoffs.

In other NHL games Tuesday night, Toronto Maple Leafs beat St. Louis Blues 4-1, Atlanta Flames defeated Pittsburgh Penguins 7-3 and Cleveland Barons beat Washington Capitals 5-1.

Wings coach Larry Wilson, following a 6-0 loss in Toronto on Saturday, blamed past management for the team's string of failures.

"It has become obvious as to what the problem is," said Wilson. "When you miss the playoffs for six or seven years, something has to be wrong and that, of course is our personnel. We just don't have the bodies to do the job and we haven't been getting them in the form of draft picks and, in trades during that period of time."

After Tuesday's loss, Wilson said that Lindsay, knowing the type of guy he is, will get the players I want."

"We've got to build a good disciplined aggressive club, and I'll tell you right now that this is the last time Detroit will miss the playoffs for a long time."

After the Wings had skated to their 15th loss in their last 18 games, with Don Lever and Derek Sanderson leading the Canucks with a goal and two assists each, Wilson also had some harsh words for some players.

"There are five or six guys on this club that have no business in the NHL. They get up a goal and start running around the ice like chickens with their heads cut off as soon as the other team scores a goal."

At St. Louis, goalie Wayne Thomas stopped 35 shots to lead the Leafs while Lanny McDonald's 41st goal of the season provided the winning margin.

Eric Vail and Tom Lysiak each scored twice and Atlanta took a 5-0 lead over Pittsburgh in the first period.

"We didn't win the game tonight because we didn't put up any resistance," said Washington coach Tom McVie. "We played the team (Cleveland) five times this year and have lost five times."

Champ and 'the Kid' Lead Police Chase

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

There is always more than one way to look at a curling championship.

First, there is the logical favorite, the champion. Secondly, there is the young rink hitting everything in sight. Then there is the popular veteran, still without a title, but back for another try. And obviously there is the local choice.

The nominal pick is the RCMP Roy Gislason rink of Winnipeg. Gislason is a two-time champion, 1975 and 1976, as a skip. And he has another ex-champion as a skip, throwing third rocks. Neil Dickson, formerly of Victoria and "glad to be back", won the title in 1974.

Manitoba is unbeaten after four rounds and won a pair fairly handily Tuesday. Gislason topped Eric Coughey of Nova Scotia 10-5, on the afternoon draw and then took care of still winless Ontario, skipped by Bob Nicholson 8-5, in the evening.

The youth charge is handled by the Saskatoon city police rink skipped by 22-year-old Norm Gilbertson. He hates rocks anywhere if they're not his own and Tuesday ran up his third and fourth victories and also in convincing fashion.

Gibertson downed Eric Bower of Prince Edward Island 10-3 in the afternoon and, although he got a tussle from Ken Ursuliak of Edmonton in the evening, he always had control in taking a tight 6-4 decision.

Saskatchewan and Manitoba are the only unbeaten rinks heading into today's fifth and sixth rounds.

Fast becoming favorite of the fans is veteran Sonny Hirtle of New Brunswick RCMP. This is Hirtle's fifth try in the finals and he's making a good run at the crown that so far has evaded him. And with next year's championship in Moncton, it would be great to take back a title.

And Hirtle still has a chance, although he lost his first game, Tuesday. Down 5-0 after three ends to Ursuliak, Hirtle came fighting back, making many fine clutch shots himself. He got a pair on the fourth, stole two on the fifth and was 6-6 coming home. But he couldn't bury his final stone and Ursuliak then came through with the game-winning shot.

He beat Ontario's Nicholson 9-6 in the afternoon and then came from behind a 4-3 deficit in the fourth to romp over Newfoundland 11-4 in the fourth round. George MacCharles of Newfoundland had nothing but trouble after his fine start and never got the chalk after the fourth end.

Hawkes and Hirtle are right behind Gislason and Gilbertson with 3-1 records and are tied with Ursuliak for third place. And if "names" mean anything try Ursuliak for size.

Ursuliak is the son of Wally Ursuliak who curled with Edmonton's Hec Gervais on his world championship rink in 1961. He also was with Gervais in 1962 and laterally has been in the curling equipment business.

And then there's Northern Ontario. Bill Dustin of Thunder Bay police department won one and lost one Tuesday but he's also in that jam-up behind the leaders at 3-1 and could cause the leaders' problems. Dustin's first win was over Quebec 9-5, and then came the heartbreaker loss to Nova Scotia.

In a knockout battle from start to finish, Coughey outlasted Dustin 4-3 but not before Dustin's final rock had come to rest. With Coughey lying two, and leading by two, Dustin, with a rock in the back of the house, went to for a tough double.

He made that part of the shot all right, but lost his own back-ring rock as well and that cost him a chance to play the extra end.

Sixers End Squabbles And Clobber Cavaliers

By The Associated Press

Philadelphia '76ers may be back on the track.

Having aired their gripes and spoken their pieces, the '76ers settled down to what they do best Tuesday night and routed Cleveland Cavaliers 133-102.

"I think the stories cleared the air," said '76ers forward George McGinnis, referring to reports of discord on the team which surfaced earlier this week. "If this can be a turning point for us, it couldn't come at a better time."

Indeed, if the 76ers are to go far in the National Basketball Association playoffs they will have to play better than they did the last month, when they had difficulty breaking even.

In other NBA games Tuesday, Denver Nuggets beat Los Angeles Lakers 107-95, Portland Trail Blazers defeated New Orleans Jazz 131-104, Kansas City Kings edged Washington Bullets 101-99, Chicago Bulls beat Boston Celtics 107-96 and San Antonio Spurs stopped New York Nets 118-108.

Julius Erving scored 29 points for Philadelphia and McGinnis had 23. The '76ers led 57-46 at intermission, started the second half with a 10-2 burst and outscored Cleveland 43-25 in the third quarter.

Baskets by Dan Issel, Jim Price and David Thompson within a span of 16 seconds midway through the third quarter helped Denver beat Los Angeles in a matchup of the two teams with the best records in the NBA.

Thompson led the Nuggets with 26 points while Bobby Jones had 15 points and 12 rebounds.

Center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had a police escort as a result of threats made against his life following the Hanafi Muslim terrorist activities last week in Washington, D.C., led the Lakers with 21 points.

Portland snapped a three-game losing streaak behind Lionel Hollins and Maurice Lucas, who scored 22 and 20 points, respectively, and handed New Orleans its eighth straight loss.

Kansas City won its sixth in a row and dealt Washington its fourth straight defeat as Sam Lacey scored two baskets and a pair of free throws in the final minute, climaxing a Kings' rally that erased a 10-point fourth-quarter deficit.

Sportsmen, Fed. Fisheries Should Abandon Old Fight

This little comment has been hanging fire for too long . . . So here goes . . . It seems to this writer some members of both local and provincial conservation organizations have become a little too fanatic in their blind opposition to federal fisheries . . . By the same token, it's quite apparent that some fisheries personnel have become equally contentious with sports fishermen . . . Offhand, I'd say this attitude is self-defeating on both sides . . . Gentlemen, let's get down to the task at hand and bury old grievances . . . Endlessly fighting old battles isn't leaving much time to concern ourselves with rebuilding the salmonid resources of this province . . . And isn't that what it's really all about?

Hunters who received a game harvest questionaire should take time out to fill them in and return them promptly . . . Good response rates, even if you didn't actually hunt in 1976, are an essential part of effective wildlife mnagement . . . Last year, about 76 per cent of the hunters contacted took time to respond. The year before, only 23 per cent responded . . . Let's keep the trend rising.

Bangor, Maine, with roughly half the population of Victoria, is using a composting system developed by the Agricultural Research Station in Beltsville, Md., to get rid of its sewage sludge . . . This process turns the sludge into a fertilizer or soil conditioner by drying it and mixing the residue with wood chips . . . Guess what we have an abundance of right now on Vancouver Island . . . Victoria is going to have to treat its sewage eventually, so why not start right now before the cost escalates even further . . . Building a similar composting plant in Victoria will at least recover some (if not all) of the costs of constructing the facility through sale of the fertilizer . . . One of the arguments in favor of straight ocean dumping was that Victoria's sewage contains relatively little in the way of industrial effluent . . . This would also make the composting facility an easier proposition.

Members of the Qualicum band unanimously passed a motion to continue to prohibit trespassing (i.e. fishing, hunting, hiking) on their reserve land . . . A portion of the Big Qualicum River runs through their land and the band is pressing for a long-scheduled meeting with both provincial and federal authorities . . . The band winds up its announcement by saying: ". . . until we can arrange a meeting and come up with a solution which will accommodate our band needs, conserve the stock in the river, preserve our land for our future generations and satisfy the needs of the sports fishermen the Big Qualicum River within the boundary of the Qualicum Indian Reserve will remain closed."

Sports fishermen might not find things much to their liking this summer and fall . . . Federal fisheries and International Pacific Salmon Fishing Commission expectations forecast below-average runs Fraser River-bound coho and pink salmon to come through Juan de Fuca Strait . . . Light returns of chinooks are also anticipated while the sockeye run is likely to be average and the chum return below-average . . . Projections also indicate an average run of chinooks and an average- to above-average return of coho in the Strait of Georgia.

Past Stars Scoff at Modern Ball

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Major-league baseball is stretching itself too thin, threatening to price itself out of business and existing on mediocre talent. That's the consensus of a score of the game's Hall of Fame members.

"There are too many .200 hitters swinging for the fences — cut and slash," said Bill Terry, former first baseman and manager of New York Giants and the last National Leaguer to bat over .400.

"When I played, if you were an outfielder and couldn't hit .300, John McGraw wouldn't give you a uniform," Terry, now a successful automobile dealer in Jacksonville, Fla., said of the legendary manager.

"They are giving everything to the batter these days," said Satchel Paige, the old Negro League star who broke into the majors at a late age and is still pitching batting practice after 50 years on the mound,

"They are narrowing home plate, flattening out the mound and giving the batter every edge. They ought to be ashamed. If you are a born hitter, you ought to be able to hit the ball."

Terry and Paige were just two of the personalities honored on the weekend at the dedication of the refurbished Al Lang Stadium, long a spring training site. St. Louis Cardinals and New York Mets, who train here, played the inaugural game.

The baseball heroes of the past who were present ranged from George "Highpockets" Kelly, a National Leaguer before the First World War, to Ralph Kiner, the Pittsburgh Pirates's home-run slugger and one of the more recent Hall of Fame inductees.

Terry scoffed at the designated hitter idea, now practised in the American League and got strong support from James "Cool Pape" Bell, a Negro Leaguer who has been rated the fastest man who ever ran the basepaths.

"How could you know whether a pitcher could hit the ball or not unless you give him a chance?" said Cool Papa, of whom it's been said he was so fast he could switch off the light and get in bed before it got dark.

"Babe Ruth was a pitcher So was Stan Musial. There were a lot of other pitchers who became hitters."

Most of the Hall of Famers criticized the expanding game as being too greedy and said the sport was probably alienating the fans.

"What, bothers me most," said former New York Yankees' slugger Mickey Mantle, who showed up with his old running mate, Whitey Ford, "is the beating that the fans have to take.

"My father was a zinc miner and if he tried to take five kids to a game today it would cost him $50. He couldn't afford it. If we're not carefull a lot fans will not be able to afford it."

Monte Irvin, the old Giant, said he was not worried so much about the availability of talent.

"I think that is healthy. I am worried about the threat of escalating salaries. I don't know how long clubs can take that expense."

Musial, now an executive in the Cardinals' organization, said that one of the game's dangers is the little regard players now have for contracts.

"They think nothing of signing a contract and then asking for renogotiations," he said. "When I played, our word was our bond."

"Those option clauses and jumping from one team to another — it's very bad for baseball," he said.

Joe Cronin, a standout player, manager and later president of the American League, said he felt the game over-all was very healthy — the talent good and plentiful enough — but that outlandish salaries presented a threat to the game.

Highpockets Kelly said he regretted the deterioration of talent.

"In the old days it was like going to school," he added. "You moved up from 'D' to 'C' into the higher minors and then into the majors. You came out a finished major league player. Now baseball has expanded so much and talent is so thin that players are taken right off the college campus and into the major leagues with less than one year's experience."
